HARVARD AND YALE IN CLASH

YALE FIELD, New Haven, May 13.—Under ideal weather conditions, Yale and Harvard met here this afternoon for their annual dual track meet. Harvard won last year by the slenderest of margins and the Elis were confident of reversing the score to-day.

The Harvard team arrived here at 1 o'clock from New London where they spent the night, dining en route. Contrary to the usual custom, the meet was not begun till 3 o'clock. The track was in first-class condition and seating accommodations were provided for about 4,000 people. The officials were experts from the New York and Boston athletic clubs.

Yale-Harvard conference was planned for this evening to antepone the proposed meet in London with Oxford and Cambridge May 6.

Conservative estimators conceded the meet to Yale by the close score of 53 to 51 points, places in the event counting five, two and one point for first, second and third places respectively. Harvard, however, is out to win, and has got two legs on the reverse cup trophy, the first being won by the Crimson last year in the Stadium.

At last, Harvard has a very good chance of winning the meet, although did the Cambridge lads come off with a win, it would be by the merest squeak. This fact will make the meet to-day the more interesting.

How Points Are Divided.

In the hundred-yard dash Thatcher, a Yale man, has been running ten seconds consistently and should win, with Austin or Billings of Harvard second, and possibly Riley of Yale third. Either Harvard man might shut Riley out, and in this case Harvard would score one more point than given her.

It looked like a walkaway for the Crimson in the quarter. Yale has nothing to touch Kelley, a fifty-seconds man and Ramsey, his teammate, or Simons will take second. Farrar of Yale is not better than a third place, and he will be lucky to get this.

The mile should be easy for Jaques, Lawless and Newton of Harvard to finish in this order. Yale has no others worth a pew of shucks and this score is a foregone conclusion.

Chisholm Picked in Hurdles.

The two mile also should add many points to Harvard's score. Withington, the holder of the Harvard record for this distance will win, and Lawless should take second, third possibly going to Gray of Yale.

Chisholm of Yale should have no trouble winning both of the hurdle events, but Lewis and Cumming of Harvard should finish in that order behind him in the high and in the reverse order in the low.

It is apparent that Harvard will make almost a clean sweep in the field events. The Crimson loses out however in the discus, Cranfield of Yale will take the high jump, with possibly Bishop of Harvard second and a Yale man third.

Outlook Not Too Blue.

Captain Kilpatrick of Yale will win the shot put, he being the best better than his nearest competitor, while Batchelder and Keays of Harvard will take the other places.

The hammer throw should afford Harvard her only chance to take a first in the field events.

Cable of Hallivard, the holder of the Harvard record will win, while Childs of Yale should take second, with a Harvard man third, either Hodges, the winner of third last year, or Chadwick or Douglas, all good men.

As has been said it's is a very close, exciting estimate, and in every case where there is great doubt about the results, points have been counted in Yale rather than to Harvard.

It will, therefore, readily be see that the outlook for the Crimson is not as Blue as it might appear at first blush.

For best story of this event see the sporting section of to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

BOY DEAD FROM CRASH WITH AUTO

Allston Jones, fourteen years old, of No. 61 Bainbridge street, Roxbury, died at the City Hospital to-day from injuries received in a collision with an automobile last night on Walnut avenue, Roxbury.

With another boy he was coasting down Walnut avenue, an automobile owned by Lewis Rosebery of No. 61 Elm Hill avenue, and operated by Max Freeman of No. 40 Longwood avenue, was going in the opposite direction. Freeman, seeing the boys coasting, turned his auto to the right, and Jones, evidently losing control of his bicycle, crashed into the left side of the automobile.

THREATS SENT TO LOGAN GIRL

Despite threats contained in two telegrams she received before going to court in Lynn as a witness for her sister Lottie, fifteen years old, Miss Ethel Logan accompanied her sister and mother to court when Isaac Marks, a merchant, and Dr. Clarence A. Stetson, a physician of that city, were arraigned. Both are accused by Lottie, whose serious illness in the Lynn Hospital and her subsequent flight by automobile to Boston and arrest here caused the arrest of Marks and Stetson.

Both telegrams received by Ethel Logan were unsigned. One read:

"Don't come around. They are trying to summon you as a witness?" and the other: "Keep out of this case altogether. It is best for you."

Lottie Logan, wept as the merchant and physician were arraigned. They waived examination and were held in $2,000 bail each for the Grand Jury. Their counsel, William E. Slack, presented Frank Allen, a former alderman, as bondsman for Stetson, and Moses Marks, a brother, and Michael Connolly, a real estate agent, as bondsmen for Marks. The sureties were accepted.

Lottie Logan, her mother, and Mrs. Stetson were each required to provide $100 surety that they would appear as witnesses.

'JEAN VALJEAN' FOUND IN NATICK

The arrest of Paul E. Hughes in Natick on a robbery and assault charge made a prisoner of him in Newark, N. J., brings to mind Victor Hugo's famous story of Jean Valjean. For four years Hughes has been a trusted employe in the C. W. Coombs' big factory in Natick and two years ago he married. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes have a little son now a year old. The accused man is head shipper at the box factory and held in such high esteem in Natick that when Police Chief Brown heard officially that he was charged with assaulting Edgar Selib in Newark five years ago and robbing him of jewelry and money valued at $632 he did not believe it. Before taking action the Natick police waited as long as duty would allow. Hughes was at last taken into custody and will have to go to Newark to face the charges. He refuses to speak of the case.

KING GEORGE AGAIN SEES KEMPTON RACES

LONDON, May 13.—King George again attended the races to-day and saw the running of the $15,000 Jubilee handicap at Kempton Park. The weather was fair and warm and thousands cheered the King, as he entered the royal box. The handicap was won by Batchelor's double with Wolfsland second and The Story third. Eleven horses ran. The betting on Batchelor's Double was 100 to 7; on Wolfsland 25 to 1, on The Story 2-1.

CAMORRA BETRAYER TELLS OF DEATH LOOT

VITERBO, May 13.—Details of how the loot was taken from the dead body of Gennaro Cuccolo and from the Cuccolo apartments in Naples after Maria Cuccolo had been stabbed to death, were told on the witness stand to-day by Gennaro Cantemaggio, the Judas's witness, when he was confronted by Enrico Alfano, the head of the Camorra.

MOTHER WRITES OF TRAGEDY

A remarkable letter from a mother, telling of a plan to drown herself and her three-year-old boy because of trouble with her mother-in-law, has been received by the AMERICAN. The letter is postmarked "Killingly, Conn." which is near Putnam. The AMERICAN has notified the police of Putnam and surrounding towns. The letter follows:

I want to put it in the Boston AMERICAN that I left my husband and I go discouraged and I threw myself and my little girl in the river. I love my husband but it was his mother that put the trouble in me and my husband he is a good honest man and I dig all I could for him but he want me to live wit his mother and I lived four years wit his mother and I had to go. My father in law he be the best man in this world but the mother in law—more trouble she sent make he put better and I was getting long ah tig with my husband if his mother mind her business.

I use to have good time with my husband ut my mother in law didn't like to see us have good time, she said that I didn't have no busines to go out with him. I am doing for the best because my poor little boy he is three years and I think if I want to work real nice not child live and give good living me that he be hard for my child when he be about 15 years old, we did us got a father and he wouldn't know him. He won't have no mother said to be a angel. I don't strong enough to write more—the God do the rest.

I ask my husband to live to other place and he said if I don't want to lived with his mother that I can do what I want. The only thing that I got to say—remember, young girls, get married—don't live with your mother in laws. I am French and I can't write very good english because my edjucation was in France. If any word that isn't wright put it right in the paper. I send you a photo to print the bit on the Boston AMERICAN.

There was no signature. On a separate scrap of paper was written:

My name is Mary Giodrich and I use to lived in So. Oxford, Mass., and before I was married my name was Mary Barlue and I had a happy home before I was married.

GLOVER FIGHT IS STILL ON

Judge John W. Hammond, who presided at the recent jury trial in East Cambridge when an attempt was made to break the will of Clarence F. Glover by four of his disinherited brothers, declined to-day to decide the controversy on the evidence that was presented to the jury. The jury disagreed. Now, unless there is a compromise, there will be a third trial of the case.

Lawyer Ranney, representing Samuel D. Elmore, the executor of the Glover estate, had made a motion asking that Judge Hammond decide the matter. When the attorneys appeared before Judge Hammond in the Boston court house to-day, he said to them:

"Gentlemen, I assume that you have not reached a compromise in the Glover will case."

They said they had not.

Then Judge Hammond said:

Evidence Conflicting.

"The issues framed present a simple, narrow question of fact; namely, whether the will was procured by the undue influence of Mrs. Glover. Upon that issue the evidence is conflicting.

"The question is pre-eminently one for the jury; and after listening to the evidence produced at the trial I remain of the opinion that the question should, if practicable, be settled by a jury.

"I am urged in support of the motion that the litigation has already proved expensive and that another jury trial will entail great additional expense; and, further, that public sentiment is such that a fair trial cannot be had.

"I do not think the expense is a sufficient reason for declining to grant it, and I am not yet satisfied that a fair trial by a jury cannot be had and a just verdict rendered.

"The motion is overruled without prejudice to the right of the executor should occasion arise to renew it or make a similar motion."

Two Attempts to Break Will.

Two attempts were made to break the will of Clarence Glover. When the will was filed for probate before Probate Judge McIntire in the East Cambridge Court he decided in favor of the will.

The will gave Mrs. Glover the income of three-fourths of the property, variously estimated to be worth from $50,000 to $70,000, for life, and the rest to Seymour Glover, one of Clarence Glover's five brothers. Seymour, to have the residue of the entire estate after Mrs. Glover's death.

The will was fought by the four Glover brothers who were out of the will. When Judge McIntire decided against them they appealed, and the case went before a jury in the East Cambridge Supreme Court. The jury disagreed.

Since this time there have been efforts to settle the case because, it was stated by some of the lawyers, the legal fighting has already eaten up about one-third of it.

Should the will be broken Mrs. Glover would get half the estate and $5,000. The brothers would share the rest. Seymour Glover has been opposed to this, although it has been reported that the widow is agreeable.

Mrs. Glover's life story, printed exclusively in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN, reaches a dramatic and tragic climax. Don't miss this wonderful "human document."

JOHNSON LIKELY TO PAY WARD $1,000

NEW YORK, May 13.—In view of the fact that Judge Hand refused to grant a new trial it is not believed that an appeal will be taken from the verdict of $1,000 awarded John M. Ward from Ban Johnson, president of the American League for slander. Mr. Johnson arrived in Chicago to-day, and was in communication with his lawyer, Abram Elkus, by wire. Judge Hand's comment that the verdict was a just one was an influence against appealing. Mr. Johnson was in Chicago and his verdict was returned last yesterday, and was notified by telegram that the suit had gone against him.

SECOND ARREST FOR BLACKMAIL

On a charge of conspiring to blackmail Arthur C. Chaney, a sea captain, John March of No. 222 Harrison avenue, Chelsea, a photographer with a studio at No. 15 College avenue, was arrested to-day by Inspectors Gleavey and Linton. On April 20 the same inspectors arrested A. H. Reese at the Quincy House on a charge of conspiring to blackmail Chaney.

Captain Chaney told the police Reese threatened to ruin his character by making public circumstances of a divorce then pending unless he would pay $1,000. Inspectors had Chaney trap Reese into representing the threat in their hearing and then placed him under arrest. Reese claimed he was acting for March, who had planned the affair. March was taken to the Charles street jail.

SWIMS WAY TO SHORE BY LIGHTNING FLASH

FREEPORT, Me., May 13.—His boat overturned in the terrific storm which struck western Maine last night, George Gregory, twenty-two years old, of Freeport swam almost a mile in a choppy sea, his way to shore shown by the incessant lightning flashes. A load of baggage which he was carrying in his thirty-foot motor boat to the Summer home of Burdis's Island of C. W. Newhall, a Boston traveling salesman, was sunk with the capsized craft. Mr. and Mrs. Newhall reached the island in another boat just before the storm broke.

LADY DECIES GAINS AFTER OPERATION

LONDON, May 13.—Reassuring news continues to come from the sick chamber where Lady Decies (formerly Vivien Gould) is recovering after an operation for appendicitis. The surgeons in attendance say certain Lady Decies will recover rapidly.

At 11 o'clock last night Lord Decies was admitted to the sickroom. Lady Decies, who was recovering from her ether bewilderment, greeted her husband with a faint smile and said:

"Don't worry, I'm getting on all right."

"MY CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR," MRS. DODGE SAYS AFTER VERDICT

MRS. J. MARSHALL DODGE.

By MRS. FLORENCE M. DODGE.

I have no complaint to make. I know everything possible has been done. I know I am innocent. I know my attorneys have put forth their best efforts in my behalf. I have just trusted everything to the Lord. And whatever comes to me I shall bear without complaint.

Worse troubles have come to me. My husband's death hurt me worse than anything that can come now. When he died I thought it would kill me. But through this I have only felt more and more calm as the days proceeded.

GIVES THANKS FOR WORK OF ATTORNEYS.

I want you to say how much I appreciate what my attorneys have done. I know that they have done everything possible. And I want to thank Attorney-General Sargent for the way he examined me. Nothing could have been gentler. He left me less nervous than when he commenced.

I did not dread going on the stand. My attorneys told me before the trial that they thought it would be best, and after the first surprise at the suggestion I was eager to do so. I wanted a chance to tell my story, my own story, just what I knew of Mr. Heath's death, to the twelve men in the jury box. And yet as the time drew near, I dreaded it. I was fairly quivering with eagerness, and yet I dreaded getting up and facing the courtroom. Why could I not have told my story just to the jury and to the judge and a stenog?

ANXIOUS TO TELL JURY THE WHOLE SOTRY.

But when the time really came it was not bad at all. My attorneys and I had talked over the events of the day Mr. Heath lost his life again and again. So I knew just what were the things that were directly connected with Mr. Heath's death. And when he began to ask me questions it was just as though we were talking over that day again. I forgot about the people in the courtroom and only remembered that I wanted to tell the jury everything that had happened that day.

As I went along I became more and more sure of myself. When Mr. Sargent started to ask me questions I was frightened at first. I couldn't imagine why he was bringing my Relief Corps books into the case. But he was very kind and did not shout at me. So I recovered my confidence. The fact that I was familiar with the books helped. It was like seeing old friends to look over them again, and I almost fancied myself back in my home in Lunenburg, adding up my accounts.

But toward the end of the afternoon, after I had been sitting on the stand for a long time, the heat in the courtroom seemed to go to my head. I could hardly see Mr. Sargent, and I could hardly understand his questions. You know he does ask questions sometimes that are very hard to understand. And I was so grateful to him and to Judge Hall when he said we would stop for the night.

"MY CONSCIENCE IS CLEAR."

The next morning was not so bad. Mr. Sargent said: "Good morning, Mrs. Dodge," before he began to question me, and that made me feel perfectly at my ease.

Although convicted, I am innocent. My conscience is clear. I believe in God and he consoles me. I am not the first person to be falsely accused and unjustly convicted. Little do the jury know how they have wronged me. I am glad my husband is not here to feel this sorrow. In my trouble I have found the most loyal friends in the world.

MRS. DODGE GUILTY OF KILLING

GUILDHALL, May 13.—Mrs. Florence M. Dodge of Lunenburg, the widow of a former high sheriff of this county and a woman prominent in church and social circles, was to-day found guilty of manslaughter for shooting and killing William A. Heath, a painter, who was at work in her home last September.

Shortly after the jury announced its verdict at 9 o'clock court adjourned until next Monday afternoon, when Mrs. Dodge will probably be sentenced by Judge Hall if sent to prison, she will go to Windsor, where Mary Rogers was hanged.

The penalty for manslaughter in this State ranges from $1,000 fine up to life imprisonment, or both. The imprisonment may be anything from one year to life. It is not believed that the case will be appealed.

Mrs. Dodge, in a statement by her for the AMERICAN, says that she is satisfied with the result. But she protests that she did not shoot Heath.

Letter Was a Factor.

The mysterious anonymous letter received by Attorney-General Sargent and claimed by the State to have been written by Mrs. Dodge, in which it was declared a story had been told to relieve war a large factor in causing the jury to reach the conclusion it did.

The jury filed in at 8.36. The court room was not more than half filled at this time. While the roll was being called Mrs. Dodge and her attorneys came in. Mrs. Bell was with them. Mrs. Dale and Mrs. Morgan sat just outside the rail. Deputy McGregor took his seat a few feet away from Mrs. Dodge.

After Mrs. Dodge had taken her seat she kept her eyes fixed upon the jurymen, scanning each face. The judge entered at 9 o'clock. As soon as he had taken his seat, he said:

"Mr. Clerk, you may ask the jury whether they have agreed."

Clerk Hubbard arose and said:

"Mr. Foreman, have you agreed upon a verdict."

Jury Reports Verdict.

Foreman Bosworth answered: "We have." The clerk said: "Florence M. Dodge, stand up." Mrs. Dodge arose. The jury also arose.

"What say you, gentlemen of the jury, do you find the defendant guilty or not guilty?"

"Guilty," answered the foreman.

"Of what?" asked Judge Hall.

"Of manslaughter," answered the foreman.

Mrs. Dodge sat down. Her head was bent, but she showed no other sign of emotion. Judge Hall thanked the jury and discharged them at 9.01. Attorney Asbury Bosworth said:

"Your Honor, I desire to move for sentence."

The judge asked the defendant's counsel if they had anything to say. Lawyer Bodgett rose and said:

"Your Honor, we desire perhaps a few days' delay so that we may look over our exceptions."

"Very well," Judge Hall replied, "court is now adjourned till Monday afternoon."

The court room cleared at once. The defense party went to Wyman's house. Mrs. Dodge the least moved in the party. Attorney Amey was busy for a time making out witness fees. Judge Hall shook hands with the jury, having them inquire as he came out of the jury room. At 9.15 o'clock the court house was almost empty.

Mrs. Heath, the widow of the slain man, said when she was told of the verdict: "Well, that is better than nothing."

"I believe the evidence warranted the finding," said Prosecuting Attorney Amey after court adjourned. "The State investigated the case thoroughly and were confident that Mrs. Dodge was guilty. We presented all the evidence to the jury and we are perfectly satisfied with the verdict. We do not care to be anything else than murder in second degree or manslaughter."

Three Ballots Taken.

Attorney-General Sargent, the leading prosecuting attorney in the case, was not in court when the verdict was rendered. It was necessary for him to leave town early to-day to Newton, Vt., to try a murder case which began to-day.

Attorney Sargent said before leaving town:

"The evidence clearly shows Mrs. Dodge committed the crime and the evidence in court warranted the finding of her guilty."

The universal opinion here is that the anonymous letter helped more to convict Mrs. Dodge than anything else.

Three ballots were taken in the jury

MELLEN A MOSES TO EAST BOSTON

President Mellen of the New Haven system was called the "Moses" of Boston by President George B. James of the East Boston Company in a statement in which he advocates State aid for the former in executing his port development plans. Mr. James said:

"We have plans of our own for the development in particular of East Boston, but we believe that the people of the city and the State should give Mr. Mellen and Mr. Byrnes free hand in their proposals for the development of the whole waterfront. On our part we shall continue the most liberal policy toward them and will be ready to let them have as much of our land as is needed in their progressive plans, and in any other way possible will co-operate with and support them.

"When a Moses appears like Mr. Mellen with the ability and the financial backing that he has, it is a pretty poor policy to cast stones at him. I doubt if the State will divert any part of the $4,000,000 appropriated for East Boston to South Boston as Mr. Mellen proposes; but I believe the legislature will appropriate additional money for Mr. Mellen's plans.

"It is certain that in any event all foreign business will remain and even grow in East Boston. The New Haven may, in my opinion, establish a terminus at East Boston for its steamship line between Boston and New York, and this will be the first ocean business established there."

BABY'S PAIN IS CAUSE OF FIRE

A pain in the little interior mechanism of six-months-old David Sadovsky was responsible for a hurry call for the fire department from 41 Endicott street, West End.

Jacob Sadovsky, a tailor, owns the building and occupies the first of the four floors. The baby cried during the night and Mrs. Sadovsky got up to prepare a poultice. She went into an unoccupied room to get some cloth, lighting the way with a match. The match burned low and she dropped it on to a feather bed.

The Sadovskys slept heavily after the baby had been quieted and when they woke up it was in a heavy smother of smoke. The whole house was full of it and Sadovsky didn't stop running until he got to a fire box and sounded an alarm.

The department made short work of the blaze, but on the way, as the driver of Ladder 24 was turning into Anderson street from Phillipse, he saw a terrified negro right in the path of the three-horse hitch. With a sudden yank to the left he turned the horses on to the sidewalk and saved the man, but the pole crashed through the window of Dana Freedman's grocery store.

MISS RUSSELL TO WED AGAIN?

PITTSBURG, May 13.—Lillian Russell, the actress, who is playing here, is to marry Alex Moore, editor of the Pittsburg Leader, some time next month, according to current reports. Miss Russell, however, says that if she ever married again she would retire permanently from the stage, which she doesn't want to do yet.

She knows Mr. Moore and likes him, she says. Then she added: "Because I am now single and he is now single there are people who will insist that we are engaged. But there is nothing in it."

Miss Russell has been married three times. Her first husband was Harry Braham, a musical director, who married her when she was a chorus girl. They lived in Boston for a while and then separated. In 1884, on May 10, she eloped with Edward Solomon, whom she married in Hoboken, and they went to London. Braham secured a divorce. In 1894 Miss Russell got a divorce from Solomon, who had a wife living in London. This same year she married John Charleton, a singer, known as Signor Perugini, from whom she was divorced in 1898.

TO DISTRIBUTE PEABODY FUND

NEW YORK, May 13.—Fourteen years after the time when they might have done so a committee of the Peabody Educational Fund has decided to expend the principal of the fund, which was to be distributed and the trusteeship closed. It has continued forty-four years.

Two years subsequent to the Civil War, George A. Peabody, the Massachusetts philanthropist, gave $3,500,000 to advance education, three-quarters of the money to be spent in the South. Of this fund, $1,500,000 was bounds of the States of Mississippi and Florida, afterward troquitted.

"As education in the North was well looked after by other agencies we devoted the income of the remainder to the South," said the venerable Dr. Samuel A. Green, for thirty years the secretary of the fund, without salary.

Trustees announced that the remaining fund of $2,860,000 with the $1,000,000 voted last year to Peabody Normal School at Nashville, Tenn., dedicated, would be apportioned among institutions in the South devoting themselves to training teachers, white and colored.

Mississippi and Florida may benefit in the final distribution.

GLOUCESTER HOME BURNS.

Fire destroyed the residence of William H. Dunbar of No. 10 Myrtle avenue, Gloucester, last night. The family were away. The loss is estimated at $6,000.

TELLER, SHORT, NOT ARRESTED

WOONSOCKET, May 13.—Although he admits responsibility for a shortage of $25,000, Hermenglide Bessette, who has served the People's Savings Bank for twenty-one years, the last ten as teller, has not been arrested. Whether or not criminal action will be taken could not be learned to-day from the trustees of the bank or the bank commission.

The announcement of the shortage was made yesterday when the absorption of the People's Savings Bank by the Woonsocket Institution for Savings was made known.

The People's Bank has suspended payment of money to depositors. The deposits total $2,000,000. It is expected that in about ten days, when the terms of the merger become effective, depositors of the People's Bank who desire their money will be paid by the Woonsocket Institution for Savings.

Bessette had received a salary of $1,500 a year as teller. He lives with his wife and two children at Slatersville, a section of the town of North Smithfield about four miles from this city. He admitted, according to Bank Commissioner and the trustees of the People's Savings Bank, that his discrepancies were caused by unfortunate personal investments.

The trustees of the bank state that partial restitution has been made by Bessette and his friends.

Bessette was formerly secretary of the Woonsocket Building & Loan Association, but retired from that office a year ago. It was announced to-day that an examination of the books of the loan association showed that the funds of that organization were intact.

A SACRED HERITAGE

Health is a heritage so sacred and precious that no one can afford to experiment with it by making use of cheap give-away "trial bottles" of medicine of unknown composition. When an invalid, weak, nervous woman takes Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription she knows exactly what she is using. By reading the list of its ingredients, as printed in a little book and attested under sacred oath as being full and correct (see 2d page of cover of this little book) she will see that it contains no alcohol, and no narcotics or other harmful or habit-forming drugs. Only pure glycerine extracts of native American medicinal roots, which have received the highest praise from the most eminent medical men of this country as remedies for woman's ailments, enter into its composition.

Constipation causes and aggravates many serious diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, one a laxative; two or three are a mild cathartic.

The Mormon invasion of New England---Read this amazing story in to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

MAYOR PATIENT AT MUDSLINGING

John F. Fitzgerald, Mayor of Boston, with his face smeared all over with mud, sat patiently for an hour and never said a harsh word about the Finance Commission or the Civil Services ditto or the lumber trust or any of the other combinations that annoy him.

If any of these bodies had attempted to apply the mud to the mayor he doubtless would have protested forcibly, but the mudslinging was done by a sculptor. A bust of the Mayor will probably soon be ready to adorn a favored niche of City Hall.

Hector Morrow, the sculptor, was the artist selected to perpetuate in chaste marble the classic features. It was necessary to make a cast, and the mayor finally found time to sit for his plaster portrait. He appeared at the studio, doffed his formal attire, and sat down. Then the sculptor scooped up his plastic clay and smeared it several inches deep over the face and head of the chief magistrate.

When the plaster was dry so was the mayor. What he said as he emerged from the mask the sculptor refuses to repeat, but it is said that if his expression of face had been recorded for the Art Commission would never be asked to select a position for the finished bust.

Her libel was filed in the Superior Court at Dedham. It states that she and Pastor Brown were married at Brooklyn, October 23, 1902, and that they lived at No. 25 Beacon street, Hyde Park. Mrs. Brown asks for the custody of a minor child, Ida, born October 20, 1904.

Baldness can be Cured

Dr. White has published a valuable book which explains all about his famous "Hall Grower." In this book Dr. White displays sectional drawings of hair magnified 300 times, comparing a healthy hair-tube with a diseased hair-tube, demonstrating how a simple, mechanical growth or parasite forms an obstruction in the hair-tube, preventing the hair from growing beyond the surface of the scalp. Dr. White shows where the parasite or obstruction is located, how it can be removed and a luxurious growth of hair obtained.

Half never dies in a living person, though it may be so badly injured that it is practically helpless. Dr. White says it is worth the half is dead. Dr. White says this is not true. If a man was dying he would be carried to the surrounding tissues and the head would become a mass of putrefaction and the person would die of blood poisoning.

Dr. White's "Hair Grower" as a treatment is fully guaranteed. It is said to be based on the health principles of the palmetto. The remedy is claimed to get to the roots, which, it is said, is the main cause for the falling of the hair. The scalp, it is said, by the body becomes debilitated. Often the hair affected and baldness results. With this use of Dr. White's Hair Grower treatment for the glands and blood are often given and recommended.

If you are bald-headed, or if your hair is falling out—if it is getting light-colored—finer than usual—if there is a little scaly—splitting at the ends, showing lack of nutrition, or if you have dandruff or any other scalp trouble, you should give immediate attention. Don't postpone it. Baldness is certainly a thief. Dr. White's Hair Grower guarantees to stop dandruff, itching and scalp troubles, and grow hair.

Send for the book. It is mailed FREE, and read what Dr. White says about the Cause of Baldness and the Remedy. He is perhaps the only physician who has found a real cause for baldness and the proper remedy to cure it. Write for the book to-day. It is FREE. AGENTS WANTED. Address

Don't write me this letter if you are young—very young. I sometimes think I lived in this city during Colonial times. My knowledge of the city was wonderful, and I soon was able to speak the language without the slightest trace of an accent. When I was fourteen—it was little more than four years ago—I became an attendant at a settlement on the East Side. There for the first time I began to absorb something different from the spirit of the times. It was through a man that this spiritual awakening first came to me. The man—need you ask?—was Dr. Latson.

Latson Always Her Guide.

"From that time he has been my guide, my friend, my master. Together we trod the blessed paths of theosophy, the occult, Brahmanism and Hindu lore. We grew together. He made me his secretary, and it was through my hands that all his blessed writings passed. He said he would make me a cultured woman"—a rapt expression of intense longing crept into the dreamy eyes—"and he did—almost. When I had become educated up to his degree of occult knowledge—the fundamentals of the eternal life—we were to mate. But why speak of that? It is gone—for a day.

"They say I killed him. Yes, they do. That is what these veiled questions, these innuendos, these invasions of the privacy of my boudoir mean. But I did not kill him. I would have killed if he had asked me. But, thank God, he had sufficient strength to save his own soul. I pray God that some day I shall have sufficient strength to free my soul. Last night I was on the point of joining my master. I was in constant communication with him—the living night—and I know he wanted me to come to him. I shall join him dead. Soon as they give me an opportunity. I shall do it as he did it—calmly, dispassionately—and I shall consider it the greatest deed of my life. It is only in this way—by freeing my soul—that I can put myself upon a par with the master." The girl paused and took up a sheet of paper written in a mature, almost masculine hand.

Writes Eulogy of "Master."

"Here have I written my brief eulogy of the 'master' for his crowning act,' she explained, and handed the pages to the reporters. They read.

"For the man who is dead was a pagan at heart—happy, free, Nonconformist. He—yet always dominated by the master spirit—the Christlike ideal which he raised and lived—the deep wisdom, the infinite compassion, comprehension and gentleness. He was both boy and sage, artist and philosopher, lover and thinker. Tender, loyal, devoted, with intellect clear and judgment sound, until the very last, he died as he said he would die—the only way a gentleman can decently get out of life—becoming man can decently get out of life—becoming unconscious, unemotional suicide.

"The man is dead. But the teacher, the teacher—ah, the master, is with us now. His work, his words, his burning, lifting memories of the man who never failed to cheer, to comfort, to inspire, to aid. The man has found Nawadhi."

Attached to this appreciation are two epitaphs, one in prose and the other in verse. The first is entitled "Requiescat in Pace" and reads:

"No more the master's voice—no more the illumined page, the clear intellect, the brilliant wit, the profound knowledge—all are still. The master sleeps. His soul is singing in Ewigheit."

The poem is entitled "The Master Sleeps," and reads:

"He knows no stress or pain;
The spirit, freed from its earthbound chain,
Has found its bright abode at last."

He knows no secret hearts again.

"The discords that lay hidden in the dust
Have vanished with the dust's decay.
The sweet harmonies stir
The spirit fled to a brighter day."

Say He Had Brain Trouble.

From two different sources yesterday the AMERICAN learned that a medical examiner or heretic had recently shown signs of brain affection. From the testimony of nearby liquor dealers, it appears that he had been drinking heavily of late.

"I believe the doctor used drugs, too," said the AMERICAN'S informant. "He had the wild eye and introspective gaze of a man addicted to drugs."

Near Dr. Latson's body in the Orientally-appointed library of the Riverside Drive apartment were found two vials, one contained a deadly drug, hyoscine, the other, morphine.

At the instigation of the mother and sister of the dead man—Mrs. Gertrude Latson, of No. 130 Bradhurst avenue, and Mrs. Elizabeth Golf of the same address—Dr. Latson's body was yesterday removed by an undertaking establishment at No. 207 West Fifty-first street. Here Lieutenant Jones, the plain clothes expert of the Police Department, made an examination of the body. The lieutenant used a microscope and paid particular attention to a feature which had struck Dr. O'Hanlon as significant—the shrivelled sheaves of powder marks at the mouth of the wound. If the revolver is held close to the flesh powder marks are generally present.

WOMAN IN DEATH PACT WITH DR. LATSON TRIES TO END HER OWN LIFE

Miss Alta Marhoun, nurse and secretary of Dr. Latson, New York physician, who declares she had suicide pact with the doctor, and who attempted to kill herself afterwards.

NEW YORK, May 13.—As a sequel to the suicide two days ago of Dr. W. B. C. Latson, physician and editor of Health Culture, Miss Alta Marhova, his mystic student and secretary, attempted to kill herself in her apartments early to-day. She was taken unconscious from a room filled room to a nearby hospital, where it was said that her recovery is unlikely.

"Dr. Latson had offered poison to me of suicide. Suicide—what is that? It is simply ridding the imperishable soul and spirit of its base and wholly earthly habitancet.

"Dr. Latson and I intended committing suicide together some day. That was understood. We were simply waiting until the burden of life became unbearable. With him it came yesterday. With me it has come to-day. I expect to join my master and teacher as soon as an opportunity presents itself. I consider suicide a noble end.

"I Would Have Killed Him."

"I did not kill Dr. Latson. But if he had lacked the physical courage necessary when it came time to free his soul from its bondage of earthly clay I would gladly have helped him attain eternity. I glory in the courage my Gesura showed when he freed that better part of himself, his soul, as he had lived—a matchless man."

Alta Marhovra, brilliant young student of mystic psychology and pupil of Dr. William Richard Cunningham Latson, edited the Health Culture and a well-known writer, whose dead body—with a bullet hole through the brain—was found late Thursday night in his luxurious apartments at the Ride, No. 1060 Riverside Drive, said this last night.

The girl was the last person known to have seen the doctor alive and was the first to gaze upon his dead body. She is declared by the police and other authorities who are examining into the strange death of the physician to be the most remarkable woman who ever occupied a central position in such a tragedy.

Mother Thinks It Murder.

So strange a tale of Indian mysticism, Oriental romance and Far Eastern theosophy is woven about the death of the writer that open doubt was expressed last night by some of the authorities as to whether the affair has not taken on a more ominous hearing than the theory of self-destruction born.

Added to the emphatic belief of the mother and sister of the dead man that the case is one for the criminal authorities was the statement of Coroner's Physician Philip F. O'Hanlon, who made an examination of the body.

"A case of murder," said Dr. O'Hanlon at his home last night. "I found the bullet was fired into Dr. Latson's brain through the neck. This is entirely out of the ares usually found in suicide by shooting. Moreover, this man was a physician, trained in anatomy, and most certainly would not have shot himself in a spot that was not liable to be fatal. I am convinced that the man did not kill himself, but we will have the wound further examined by Lieutenant Jones, the gumshoe expert from Police Headquarters."

In the meantime Coroner Feinberg and most of the detectives are working on the curious case will entertain no other than the suicide theory.

Calls Girl a Fanatic.

"This girl is incapable of lying," said the coroner. "She is such a religious fanatic that she would consider herself doomed to eternal purgatory were a lie to die. One look into her clear, brown eyes and the strong spiritual face convinced me that she was guilty of no wrongdoing. We have investigated her story fully, have checked up her movements, and haven't found a single flaw in her testimony."

Indeed, no one coming under the spell of the deep eyes and dreamy, intellectual manner of the little Jewess could fail to be impressed by her absolute sincerity. The girl's beauty is not that of a type. It is rather that of a personality—a portrayal of intellectual culture, and of personality constantly striving to reach the ideal that she first spoke.

"I was of the East Side once," she began in a well-modulated voice that fell softly upon the ear, many years ago. My parents? I will tell you that I have none. Isn't it matters not.

"I came to this city as a very young—very young. I sometimes think I lived in this city during Colonial times. My knowledge of the city was wonderful, and I soon was able to speak the language without the slightest trace of an accent. When I was fourteen—it was little more than four years ago—I became an attendant at a settlement on the East Side. FLAMES ROUT HOTEL GUESTS

Twelve persons, guests and employes of the Jefferson House at No. 18 North street fled to the street early to-day when fire caused a loss of $3,000 in the four-story brick building occupied by Arthur E. Dore & Co., Incorporated, at Union and North streets.

The Jefferson House adjoined the burning building, and when the blaze was discovered it was thought the hotel had taken fire. The hotel rapidly filled with smoke and James Young, a waiter, ran through the halls banging on doors and shouting "Fire!" until everybody had been aroused.

The blaze started on the North street side of the building adjoining the Jefferson House, in the rear of the second floor. The flames spread to an elevator shaft and shot up to the roof, bursting from the windows on each of the four floors.

The heat melted the gas pipes and the ammonia pipes which fed the refrigerating plant of the Dore Company on the two upper floors, and the building rapidly filled with the poisonous gases. So dense were the fumes that the firemen were obliged to work in relays and several were nearly overcome.

Meat Inspector George W. Smith of the Board of Health was passing the building when a puff of smoke followed by a rush of flame shot out of the windows on the second floor, and in less than a minute the fire had leaped from floor to floor in the elevator shaft to the roof.

Smith sounded an alarm, while Dennis Hickey, a marketman, hurried into the Jefferson House to warn the occupants. He was met at the door by Young. Flames were leaping around the building into the windows on the upper floors of the hotel, and the guests and other who were awakened were filled with alarm.

The elevator shaft was a furnace when the firemen arrived. The hotel was in danger and it was forced a second alarm would be necessary. Ladders were raised to the third floor, but when the firemen smashed the dirt-covered windows they found access to that floor blocked by the large ice chests which extended from one end of the floor to the other.

Those who succeeded in getting inside the building from Union street were driven back by the poisonous gases and they were assisted by Chief Mullen to take no such risks, but to confine their efforts to checking the progress of the fire.

The rear of the second floor where the fire is believed to have started was occupied by the Automatic Butter Sibling Company. Men were at work there last night and it is thought a cigar or cigarette end set fire to the woodwork near the elevator shaft and that the blaze had been smouldering for hours before it was discovered.

DENIES WELLESLEY JANITOR STOLE CAT

The janitor of Wellesley College, who some time ago was brought before the police on the ground of having taken cats for the dissecting table, was defended by Professor Albert P. Morse, professor of zoology at Wellesley, at a meeting of the Teachers' School of Science Association at the Brunswick Hotel. "The Janitor," Professor Morse said, "picked up stray cats only. On one occasion he went to a place and asked if there were any strange cats there, saying that he needed one more. He was told to take a cat that had strayed there during the day. It was thought that the feline had no master. Accidentally it happened to be some one's pet pussy. The janitor never intended to steal cats. It was simply an accident. That's how the cat story started."

EXPLAINS MELROSE SCHOOL CHANGE

Mrs. Isabella Stantial, secretary of the Melrose School Board, says that Principal William H. Whiting, for the past twelve years head of the Melrose High School was asked to resign by the board because the conditions of the city demanded that he be replaced. When asked if it was the idea of the board to secure a younger man for the position, she said that inasmuch as the board had agreed it would be better to say nothing regarding the matter, and by this means help Mr. Whiting secure another position, she would only say the matter had been carefully gone over for the past year or two and each member of the board knew what the outcome would be, as well as did Mr. Whiting. "Nothing but the best of feeling exists between Mr. Whiting and the board," said Mrs. Stantial.

MRS. DODGE CONVICTED OF KILLING

MANSLAUGHTER VERDICT FOUND AGAINST WIDOW TRIED FOR MURDER OF HEATH.

room. All voted Mrs. Dodge guilty on the first ballot. Then they discussed the subject as to whether she were guilty of murder in the second degree or manslaughter. They came in for instructions. A third ballot was then taken after the jury got back to the jury room and all agreed that Mrs. Dodge was guilty of manslaughter.

Monday afternoon Mrs. Dodge will probably be sentenced. If sentenced to State's prison she will be sent to Windsor, Vt., where Mary Rogers was hanged.

Lawyer Bhoigett, for the defense, said finding. The men were out such a short time that it is easily seen that they considered Mrs. Dodge guilty of murder and acquittal. We will look over our exceptions and may appeal to the Supreme Court for a new trial. We believe we have some good exceptions and a new trial may be granted. However, we are not ruling out nothing as yet.

"Mrs. Dodge took the verdict more calmly than she did. She slept fairly well last night while her attorneys were unable to sleep at all. Mrs. Dodge is one of the quietest women I have ever seen. I know she is innocent. She is a victim of circumstances of which God alone can tell now that Heath is dead."

May Spend Life in Prison.

The penalty for manslaughter in Vermont may be anything from $1,000 fine to life imprisonment at the discretion of the judge. The statute reads:

"A person who commits manslaughter shall be imprisoned for life or not less than one year, or fine of $1,000, or both."

Colonel Porter Dale, of counsel for Mrs. Dodge, said:

"The evidence did not warrant such a finding. The men were out such a short time that it is easily seen that they considered Mrs. Dodge guilty of murder and acquittal. We will look over our exceptions and may appeal to the Supreme Court for a new trial. We believe we have some good exceptions and a new trial may be granted. However, we are not ruling out nothing as yet.

"Mrs. Dodge took the verdict more calmly than she did. She slept fairly well last night while her attorneys were unable to sleep at all. Mrs. Dodge is one of the quietest women I have ever seen. I know she is innocent. She is a victim of circumstances of which God alone can tell now that Heath is dead."

Mrs. Dodge Impassive.

Every one in the room listened intently. Jurymen, lawyers, court attendants and spectators leaned forward intently, and in the slight pause that followed there was throughout the crowded room, accompanied at intervals by the scraping of feet, a common clearing of the throat or the soft rustle of clothing as a woman changed her position. Through the open windows came the sound of the cranking of thousands of engines in the city's factories, and, from a short distance away, a mournful accompaniment to the jury's verdict in the proceedings.

The charge to the jury Judge Alfred A. Hall said in part:

"In my story of what just what occurred on the fatal day of September 17, 1910, on that date the respondent and William Mrs. Dale, at a social call at the home of Mrs. Heath and I were all alone, and after Mrs. Heath had left the room Mrs. Dodge came to his death by the wound inflicted by a shot from a revolver or pistol.

"The respondent has admitted that the wound was inflicted accidentally by Mr. Dodge. Upon this point you have the province alone it is to weigh more than we charge for the entire outfit. A One Hundred Military Companies, Cadet Corps, Parades, Hunters, Target shooters, Rifle Collectors, Rifle Demonstrators, etc., is also recommended, and this announcement to be had.

two lamps burned. Over the inclosure reserved for the lawyers was a cluster of lamps, while there was on the reporters' table. Except for these the room was in darkness.

Every seat was filled, and in the semi-gloom could be dimly seen the white faces of the spectators, appreciably awed by the solemnity of the hour and the judicial dignity of the proceedings. The tolling of the Unitarian church bell at 5:30 announced to many as if it was the summons for the passing of a soul.

Before that solemn tolling there had been the hum of conversation in the room. As the bell boomed out its summons everything became instantly silent, the footsteps of Judge Hall were walked to his place on the bench alone breaking the stillness. Judge Hall on his part was taking up the case. He first instructed Clerk of Courts Hubbard to enter the name of A. W. Bosworth as foreman of the jury and then at once began the reading of his charge.

Widow Hints at Story.

"I cannot talk about the trial. You must know what my feelings are. I have just here helpless, day after day, helpless to do anything except go on the stand and tell my story of what I know. Not all of these rules of evidence that they tell me about, would not prevent, I think we would get a lot of things in the case. But at any rate, I am glad it's all over. Do you blame me?

At 9:45 came the first sign from the jury. Foreman Bosworth opened the door of the jury room and called to Deputy Sheriff Bemis that the jury wished to speak to the judge. Mrs. Dodge and the counsel were summoned and quickly, as by some telepathic agency as it seemed the court room filled again.

"Have you agreed and taken their seats, Judge Hall inquired:

"Did you come in for further instructions?"

Foreman Bosworth replied: "Your Honor, we request that you give us again that part of your charge which relates to the difference between manslaughter and murder in the second degree."

Accused Woman Pales.

As Mr. Bosworth started to speak, Mrs. Dodge leaned forward and listened intently. As he finished she became deathly pale. Her head fell forward and her eyes seemed to be closed. For an instant it seemed as if she was about to collapse, but she quickly regained her poise.

Judge Hall read over the desired portion of his charge and asked:

"Then, is that all, gentleman"

"Yes, sir," replied Foreman Bosworth, to which added significantly: "I think we shall be ready to render a verdict at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning."

"Then you may retire," said Judge Hall. Then he added: "We will now take a recess until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning, which they think they will be at 9 to render a verdict."

Once again the jury retired. The spectators filed slowly out. Mrs. Dodge returned to her room and the feeble lights in the corridors were extinguished. Only the lamps in the jury room were burning and on the outside of the courthouse were a dozen or more of townspeople, who stared at those dimly burning lights as if fascinated. The lights in the jury room burned until about 10:30, when the jurors went upstairs to their sleeping quarters in the grand jury room.

A moment afterwards and the courthouse was dark. A few people lingered about the steps in front of the building, discussing in hushed tones the trial and the probable outcome, but they, too, soon gone to their homes and the village was dark and silent.

A Dramatic Moment.

Interest in the case was kept at a high pitch during the afternoon proceedings by the eloquent arguments of the attorneys for prosecution and defense.

Mrs. Dodge awaited the result with coolness and confidence. During the day she ran the gamut of emotion from bitter tears to gay laughter. She cried when the jury retired after Judge Hall's charge for her liberty. She laughed later in the day when a wonder picture that took shape in the great crowd that jammed the court room and surrounded it, peering into the open windows.

Attorney-General Sargent finished his address on his minute before 5 o'clock. Judge Hall then adjourned court until 7:30 in the evening. He then delivered his charge and the jury began the consideration of the case.

One of the most dramatic moments of the trial was the finish of Colonel Dale's speech—one of the most eloquent appeals ever heard in this part of the State. Walking toward the accused woman as her eyes grew swelling with tears he cried:

"And to you I shall set you free!"

The crowd in the courtroom had been fairly at a pitch of excitement by the colonel's speech. The jury had listened to it with close attention and were deeply impressed in his explanation of the accidental shooting. It dropped the revolver, let it had gone off twice, and had received both wounds accidentally.

Then came the calm, judicial argument of Attorney-General Sargent. He did not ask that she be hung. But he asked that she be punished for killing the man who had been her husband's friend and partner. Dale was flowery, poetic and impassioned. Sargent was logical and strong. His voice rang through the room and shot out of the window to the waiting crowd.

Sargent was quiet. He was argumentative. He was strong in the logical array of his arguments.

A good drank in all the words of both of the speakers. Then Judge Hall began his charge. It was brief and pointed. He told the jury to dismiss from their minds the idea of murder in the first degree. Then he defined murder in the second degree, manslaughter, and what would be legal in bringing in a verdict acquitting the woman.

REBELS MARCH ON MEXICO CITY

EL PASO, Tex., May 13—All peace negotiations have been broken off. Provisional President Madero today received news that General Figueroa, the southern revolutionary leader, had started his march on Mexico City, after pledging his full support to the government established at Juarez.

Reports from Mexico show that the rebels are in control of strategic points at many places and that fighting is either going on or is impending in scores of localities. Cuernpcion de Lerdo, state of Zacatecas, has been captured by the rebels, Southerners, in the same state, is being attacked and rebel bands are active near Tepic. The consul at Cananea, state of Sonora, telegraphed that rebels are surrounding that place. The consul at Chihuahua telegraphed that a large force of insurrectos is marching on that city.

Agua Prieta is again the scene of activity. Two hundred and eighty armed men from Nacozari under Captain Sosa have arrived and 3,000 more under General Bullna will get in to-day. The combined forces will march overland to Hermosillo where with Cabral's forces they will attack the capital of Sonora. Town after town have been reported as going over to the insurrection. Cabral, who has demanded the surrender of Cananea, expects that the garrison will join his forces in a march on Hermosillo.

Twelve thousand men, armed and fully equipped for battle with the federal government, are mustering to-day in Guerrero for attacks first on Iguala and then on Chilpancingo as steps in their advance on Mexico City.

The men under command of General Ambrosio Figueroa have already begun their campaign. Couriers are speeding to all divisions of the revolutionary forces, larger than that which the government of Mexico can muster, calling on it for battle.

Four hundred men under Colonel Joaquin Miranda are marching to Huitlauco. There are already gathered in that village 6,000 men, mostly mounted and well armed. Below Chilpancingo nearly 6,000 are advancing, and Pinalmillo and even from Mexico City are marching fully 2,000 more.

General Figueron and Colonel Miranda are men of fine soldierly bearing, both educated in the military service of the republic, well trained in arms, and are preserving perfect order in their army.

An instance of this came up recently when two soldiers outlined what out of es others and killed an old man. They were captured and immediately shot by orders ke om General Figueron.

HAZEL HOLLAND, UNDER X-RAY TO DETERMINE HURTS.

HAZEL McHOLLAND

Miss Hazel Holland of No. 22 Alpine street, Roxbury, will be examined by the X-ray to-day to determine the extent of the injuries received when she was hit by an outbound Grove Hall car at Joseph Warren square, Roxbury. She was taken into Dr. Littlefield's office, in front of which the accident happened. Miss Holland had not lost consciousness, although she had been thrown. There were injuries to the fourth rib and possible fracture.

Miss Holland and her mother had come down to the square from their home on Alpine street, and Miss Holland left her mother at the corner to cross the street, intending to take a car ride through Cambridge. Her mother called after her, "Look out," as she saw the car bearing down upon her, but the girl did not see it, nor did she hear any warning bell. The motorman gave his number as 1077.

KELIHER CASE AGAIN PUT OFF

The reargument of the appeal of William J. (Big Bill) Keliher in the Cambridge bank case has been postponed again. It will not take place till next October.

An order to this effect was issued today by Judge Colt, senior judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, because Judge Putnam, one of the judges who heard the first argument on appeal, is ill. Judge Putnam will not be able to resume the bench till Fall.

This means that, in all probability, Keliher must spend the sweltering summer months in Charles street jail. Nor will this jail period be deducted from his prison sentence of eighteen years, if the appeal is finally denied.

Keliher went to Charles street jail when his $50,000 bondsmen surrendered him after he was sentenced.

The Eternal Question—

Where can I get good help?

A man or woman who responds to an advertisement is more likely to be an intelligent person—one who knows his business—than is the person who aimlessly drifts around "looking for something to do."

The intelligence of the skilled employes who answer the "help wants" in the American's "want ad" department is proverbial. They know what they can do—they respond to the opportunity offered them.

Ads can be sent any time—but it is well for people in a hurry to know that advertisements phoned to the office up to 11 a. m. will appear in all the afternoon editions—thoroughly covering the field.

WOMAN'S WAGE BILL SIGNED

Governor Foss signed a resolve to-day providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the wages of women and minors in every industry in Massachusetts.

The commission is to report to the Legislature not later than the second Wednesday in January, 1912, on the advisability of establishing boards which shall consider the need and feasibility of fixing minimum rates of wages for women and minors.

The resolve is one of the most important labor measures to come before the Legislature this year. It was introduced by John Golden of Fall River, prominent in textile organizations.

The action on the part of the Governor and the Legislature has the hearty approval of the state branch of the American Federation of Labor, the Massachusetts Federation of Labor, the American Association for Labor Legislation, the Massachusetts Civic Federation, besides the endorsement of women's organizations, including the Woman's Trade Union League.

The commission is to consist of five persons, one to be a woman representing the minors, one for labor, one for the manufacturers, and the Governor is allowed his own wishes in the appointment of the other two members. The commission must be appointed by the Governor and his council within 30 days.

The resolve carries with it $2,000 to enable the members of the commission to carry on the investigation.

Mayor Fitzgerald's latest proclamation is addressed to the Italian-speaking residents of this city and printed in Italian. The Boston "Cigarmakers' Union to-day commenced to circularize the North End with Mayor Fitzgerald's appeal, and arrangements have been made by the union cell chiefs to distribute at least 30,000 of the leaflets among the Italian-speaking residents of Greater Boston.

MISS EDITH DEACON, WHO LOSES ESTATE LEFT BY PEABODY

PEABODY NEVER SIGNED WILL

Miss Edith Deacon, the plucklest American girl of record, the little she won after her long vigil in attending her fiance, the late George Lee Peabody of Boston and Salem, who died at Baltimore from the effects of operations several months ago, did not inherit her fiance's fortune, as he intended.

Mr. Peabody, realizing his time was short, made his will, leaving his fortune to Miss Deacon, who had given up everything to be near her fiance in the year of more of his illness. The will was never signed, for Mr. Peabody became so ill he could never carry out his wish.

Miss Deacon is with relatives of Mr. Peabody and is reported to have changed noticeably from the lively girl and petted of the Newport cottage settlement to a quiet young woman.

Miss Edith Deacon won the sympathy and praise of her friends and the admiration of the public generally on account of her great devotion to Mr. Peabody and her assiduous care of him.

Soon after their engagement was announced Mr. Peabody became ill. Then followed months and months of anxiety. The wedding was announced for a certain date. Then it was postponed on account of Mr. Peabody's condition.

A second date was set, destined never to be fulfilled. Mr. Peabody's condition grew worse. Miss Deacon gave up society life absolutely. She came to Boston and was at the bedside of her fiance as much as his physicians would permit. She fairly wore herself out for him.

When Mr. Peabody was taken to Baltimore in a last effort to save his life, Miss Deacon accompanied the sick man and his mother to the Southern city. The long strain, with its alternating hope and despair, told even on Miss Deacon's vigorous vitality.

DICKINSON AND TAFT IN ACCORD

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—It is not worth while for the country to expect the resignation of secretary of War Dickinson with any difference between himself and President Taft on the Mexican situation, or any other issue that has been before the Taft Cabinet.

These differences do not exist. The President and his Secretary of War would have been in absolute accord. I state this as a fact beyond question. For some days past there have been vague and unbelievable rumors to the effect that Secretary Dickinson held a more aggressive view of the duty of the government toward Mexico than that which suits the President. This is not true.

In fact, Secretary Dickinson is even more radical than the President in his opposition to intervention in Mexico.

A few days ago, when Senator Bacon had his sharp colloquy in the Senate with Senator Stone, Mr. Dickinson and Senator Bacon a letter of emphatic thanks and approval for his attitude.

Resignation Held in Abeyance.

Moreover, Secretary Dickinson's resignation has been held in abeyance for two weeks because of the unsettled condition of affairs on the border, and even to-day, in view of the disquieting rumors from Juarez City, the Secretary expresses to the President his willingness, at great personal sacrifice, to continue in position until affairs on the border were in satisfactory condition.

There is absolutely nothing in the change in the War Department beyond that which appears in the correspondence which is published in this paper. I have this personally and in unmistakable sincerity from Secretary Dickinson himself, from Mrs. Dickinson and from the President.

The President declares positively that if there were anything behind the resignation that does not appear he would frankly and unhesitatingly tell it to the AMERICAN and to the public generally.

The whole truth is Secretary Dickinson gave up a great and lucrative law practice to accept the war portfolio. He is not a very rich man and it was a sacrifice on his part to lay down his professional income.

Property in Legal Tangle.

He has invested his whole fortune in coal properties in Tennessee and Kentucky, and these properties are in a legal tangle at this time, which imperatively requires his personal skill and attention to extricate them from disaster.

He has behaved with great unselfishness and a high sense of public duty in remaining at his post so long. Mr. Dickinson is one of the most picturesque public men that have figured in the public life of this decade.

He is a stalwart Democrat—as much so now as ever in his life. He came into the Cabinet as a Democrat because of the President's high regard for his great acumen, his immense working capacity, and the "Dickinson law," which grew from it him for the stern duties of organization and command.

Boston's Streets See a Novel Display in the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company's Old Prairie Schooner, Oxen and Mules

Bostonians gazed in wonder at the sight of a mule team and an ox team on Summer street yesterday afternoon. Eight tiny mules, in charge of Harvey Pugsley, and six oxen, in charge of Peter Young, were hitched to separate wagons, loaded with boxes of Budweiser beer, the product of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company of St. Louis.

The teams arrived here several days ago. The oxen are attached to an old-fashioned prairie schooner, even the dogs following to make the outfit look as if it had just crossed the plains.

The mule team is said to be without equal in the world. The Anheuser-Busch Company employed a veterinarian, who spent six months collecting the eight mules used in the team. They are so perfectly matched that none but the driver can tell which is which. The harness on the team is said to have cost $1,200. Two of the eight mules are held in reserve.

The oxen come from Kentucky and Texas. The lead pair are perfectly matched, being twins. Two oxen are also held in reserve. It is the intention of the Anheuser-Busch Company to show the teams in all of the larger cities in the country.

FOUR INDICTED IN GRAFT PROBE

LAWRENCE, May 13.—There is consternation in Lawrence political circles. The Essex Grand Jury has reported to Judge Schofield at Newburyport four indictments in connection with the alleged Lawrence graft. More indictments are expected next week. It was suspected, when the grand jury made special investigation here last week and followed it up by summoning witnesses to the Newburyport session, that some definite results would be forthcoming. There is lively speculation now as to the new men to be hit.

The indictments already reported are against Fred L. Snow of Westford, a result of paving block contracts; Superintendent of streets Patrick J. Lyons, Contractor Philip Holland, and Street Department Clerk Michael J. Flynn of Lawrence. John P. Kane, confidential clerk for Contractor Holland, had been bound over to the Grand Jury upon conspiracy charges with the four indicted men, but in his case the Grand Jury reports a "no bill."

Specifically all four men indicted are charged with juggling accounts and raising bills for paving stones supplied for paving the main streets of Lawrence. Snow had quarries in Milford, N. H., and supplied over a million blocks to the city. Holland had contracts for paving, and the superintendent of streets was required to pass upon the work and approve bills.

It was ascertained that while all the blocks came by freight from Milford, N. H., the railroad way bills showed a big variance, and a survey of the street paving showed that twice as many blocks were paid for as the city actually used.

Snow State Witness.

Bills were made out to the city for the excess amount and were paid from the city treasury.

Contractor Snow in a civil case in the Supreme Court exposed the conspiracy and bluntly informed Judge Loring that he intended to tell the whole story of a systematic robbery of Lawrence by officials and contractors. He was the only $8 of the four indicted men to testify before the Grand Jury.

Snow will be used as a witness by the State.

The further probe by the Grand Jury into Lawrence conditions will be continued next week at Newburyport. Judge Schofield has ordered the jurors to make a supplementary report Thursday. Sensational arrests are looked for after the report. The investigation now being conducted relates to the election this year of a city treasurer in Lawrence. Contractor Snow says that in one case where a bill for blocks was raised $1,000, the money on being drawn from the city treasury by him was turned over to Holland, to be used, so Holland explained, for buying the votes of two aldermen.

Aldermen on Grill.

Snow declares that Holland showed him a book containing names of Aldermen and Councilmen he had bribed and whom he declared he could get for a price any time. This little book, the Essex grand jurors affirm, have been unable to secure, but the Aldermen and Councilmen, the Mayor and the Mayor's secretary are being grilled by the Grand Jury.

These new indictments provide but a sequel to the graft conditions in Lawrence that became a systematic part of the government of the city when William F. White, now in prison, became Mayor.

With White's accession to the Mayor's chair wholesale removals of department officials were made and wherever possible friends of the new Mayor were given places. Most of them were men of less than ordinary ability and who, without asking reasons, implicitly followed the requests of Mayor White.

White is a Republican in politics and though Lawrence is strongly Democratic, White's harangues on the street corners attracted enough Democratic votes to piece out the solid Republican vote and elect him Mayor.

It was the first time in fifteen years that Lawrence had a Republican city government. The rumorists that White made from offices were explained by him openly as being made to give the Democrats a rest from holding down fat city positions and give the Republicans a chance.

Jobs Bought and Sold.

Republicans of the better class began early to find fault with Mayor White's appointees to office. The strong and old line members of the party were set aside for non-descripts, some of whom had only joined the party when White's star began to ascend.

The Grand Jury revelations of last Autumn showed that the prevailing idea of the new government was to graft as much as possible from the city. Three-fourths of the departments became honeycombed with graft. Positions in the police and fire departments were bought and sold and while the largest contracts ever given out for public work were made, the contractors were forced to settle heavily with the new city officials.

In one year all the money that the city could borrow for permanent improvements had been spent and its debt had reached the unprecedented mark of $2,000,000.

Things were in such a deplorable state that District Attorney Peters remarked that "under the present regime, if you sell a bunch of lead pencils to the city of Lawrence, there's a rake-off demanded at City Hall."

State Police Officer Frederick F. Flynn was detailed by District Attorney Peters to look up graft conditions. In a few months Mayor White was sent to prison for three years, while fourteen aldermen and Chief James A. Hamilton of the fire department were sent to prison also.

Raised Bills to City.

Matthew Ira Gray Ripon, Mayor White's secretary pleaded polo to larceny of money from the city and was let off with a fine and the promise to make restitution. Mayor White had appointed James A. Hamilton to head the fire department and Hamilton declared that he was simply counseled by Mayor White in the bribery proceedings under stress of orders from the City Hall.

Under Mayor White contracts were let for street paving and new sidewalks, the cost amounting up to half a million dollars. Patrick J. Lyons was superintendent of streets and much of the contract work went to Philip Holland. Both Superintendent Lyons and Contractor Holland were friends of the Mayor.

The new indictments found allege that through the conspiracy of Superintendent Lyons and Holland, in which Chief Clerk Flynn of the street department took part, the city was robbed of thousands of dollars.

Fred L. Snow supplied paving blocks to cities from quarries in Milford, N. H. Mr. Snow has informed the police that he was told to make out raised bills for carloads of blocks never supplied the city. He says that he raised bills at the instigation of Holland, and became both clerks, Flynn, the street department clerk, and Kane, Holland's clerk, told him that things would be all right.

Used Funds for Bribery.

To double assure him, regular city bills all ready to be made out were given him signed in blank by Superintendent Lyons. Mr. Snow says it was to approve the bills for paying blocks.

Snow was arrested with Superintendent Lyons, Contractor Holland and Clerks Flynn and Kane. All five were bound over last March to the Grand Jury which has just now reported. Snow has not only told the State police of his entire part in the conspiracy but in a civil proceeding in the Supreme Court told Judge Loring that bills were raised in Lawrence and the excess money turned over to agents for the purpose of bribing aldermen and councilmen.

John P. Kane, clerk for Holland, secured a "no bill" from the Grand Jury because the jurors felt that he acted only in a clerical capacity for an employer.

Early trials will be had on the new indictments and further exposure of the Grand Jury held until, as District Attorney Atwill expresses it, "Lawrence is purged of graft."

EXHIBITS GAME IN FOWL CASE

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, May 13.—With two game fowl to show as Exhibits A and B, the county and state officers brought Peter Kelly of Hopkinton before Judge Higley in South Framington District Court charged with the larceny of forty fowl from Fred H. Gavitt of Waterford, Ct., proprietor of the Hotel Royal at New London. Kelly denied the larceny and furnished $1,000 bail for a continued hearing on May 27.

All the Framinghams, Hopkinton, Cordaville and other districts were keenly interested in this fowl charge against Kelly. The prosecution says that, before the case is finished, several well-known "sports," who follow cocking mains, will be indicted.

Meanwhile Exhibits A and B are making life miserable for the police by crowing lustily in a station cell.

Gavitt, the complainant, says he had forty game fowl, kept for his hotel, stolen in New London on April 15. He came here with Deputy Sheriff J. H. Tubbs of New London. It is said they removed the Framinghams would be a likely place in which to look for game fowl on account of the reputation of "sports" here as cock fighters.

Armed with a warrant, Gavitt and Tubbs, with State Officer Charles F. Burns and Deputy Sheriff William H. Childs of Framingham, went to Kelly's place last Thursday. They found two fowl in the barn left which Gavitt says belong to him and are part of the forty taken a month ago.

BREAKS BONE IN JUMP TO ESCAPE ARREST

Walter Feeney, eighteen, of No. 71 West Sixth street, South Boston, and William Perry, seventeen, of No. 96 Albion street, South End, were held in $2,000 bail for the grand jury by Judge Ely in the Municipal Court. They are charged with robbing Henry Brown of No. 195 O street, South Boston, of a watch valued at $50, on the Dover street bridge. In an attempt to escape the police Feeney leaped over the bridge and broke a wrist when he landed on the draw pier. The other youth was taken after a chase. A companion also leaped over the bridge, but landed on the railroad tracks and got away.

TANGIER, Morocco, May 13.—An unverified report received here to-day states that more than half of the Fez garrison has mutinied and that the rebels expect to be in possession of the city within a few hours.

PICKING NINE IN MIDDLEBORO

MIDDLEBORO, May 13.—Managers J. F. Murphy and E. M. O'Toole of the local baseball team are now trying out the candidates each evening at the North street grounds, and as far as possible all the members of the team will be local men. The fans here are pleased with the team's entering the Trolley League, as better and faster ball is promised by the management.

Already there are several candidates for the positions and by the middle of the coming week, the lineup will be determined. The season in the Trolley League opens May 30, but the first home game will be played here May 27.

The most probable lineup of the team from the present standing of the candidates is a strong one and the positions will be filled as follows: Butts will try his old position as catcher, and Harry Smythe, the heavy southpaw twirler, will fill the box; Relth Mendall, a fast young star, will cover first base; Clough or Dean, second; Wheeler, third, with Kelley as a support at shortstop.

BOUTS POSTPONED.

GOVERNOR GRAY DERBY FAVORITE

LOUISVILLE, May 13.—This is the day of all days for true Kentuckians with a drop of red blood in their veins. The Kentucky Derby is to be decided, and it is expected fully 50,000 lovers of the thoroughbred will swarm into the infield and crowd the grandstand and paddock at Churchill Downs.

Governor Gray still rules a heavy favorite. This past twenty-four hours made him even a more pronounced choice than on previous days. The unsteel son of Garry Herrmann and Salaga is to the pink of condition and is ready to run the mile and a quarter and also go a greater distance if it were required. He is thoroughly tried to beat, and a little 2 to 1 offered by a local speculator for a couple of hours was eagerly accepted by the gelding's admirers.

As the hour for the Kentucky Derby approaches Meridian supplants Round the World as second choice in the betting. In the meanwhile the filly may be the second choice, for she has a host of local admirers, but the horsemen who do not fancy Governor Gray will place their coin on the Eastern horse.

There is a lot of sentiment for Round the World, as all of her races over the Churchill Downs course she has always performed in a commendable manner. She has never faltered for an instant in her races. Those who love the horse for what he or she is can not help but admire Round the World. They do not care whether the filly is at her best or not. They will wager their money on the daughter of Lackford.

There will be many thousands won and lost on the Kentucky Derby this year. Never since the initial running of the race, when Aristides beat Volcano, has so much interest been displayed. The Derby is always a race which Kentuckians take great pride and interest in, but this season their enthusiasm is bubbling over. There is reason for this. It is because no eligible stands out in the light. Governor Gray, Meridian and Round the World each stands an excellent chance of being returned the winner, while the other eligibles have shown enough to warrant their others in sending them to the post.

For best story of this event see the sporting section of to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

FIGHT NEWS OF LOCAL INTEREST

When Jimmy Walsh and Al Delmont start to mix things up at the Armory next Tuesday night there'll be something doing. Both these little fighters have always shown class and the battle of next week is to be fateful to them. Matchmaker McCann did a good piece of work when he got the boys together, after fixing up an agreement as to weight question. Walsh is so anxious to win that he has gone into careful training. He cancelled his bout for last Thursday night rather than take a chance of injuring his opportunity to step Delmont. Delmont hasn't been idle. Undoubtedly the members of the club will turn out in large numbers to witness the meeting of the boys.

Lightweight bouts are always more popular with the fight fans than the heavyweights. Who cares about seeing two big men rush at each other with a single punch or two; then separate and do the same thing over and over again. A real action put on the little fellows with the footwork and a'l work that thrills the spectators.

Joe Woodman has a perfect right to disagree with remarks about Porky Flynn. We don't all look at things from the same viewpoint. Of course Joe likes Porky. If he didn't he wouldn't be his manager. Joe comes back with a scorching denouncement of the fight experts who thought Porky did not come up to expectations, and the AMERICAN was glad to print the letter. Come again Joe. Any time you disagree with what is said about your fighting friends, send in the side of it. The public likes to get every side and the AMERICAN affords the only channel where you can reach them all at one stroke.

W. D. Creighton of No. 186 Commercial street writes the AMERICAN that he has assumed the management of John Mugles and Joe Brown, both of this city. Mugles is the amateur boxer who defeated Nick Albanese of East Boston. He fights at 117 pounds and is anxious to meet any boy in New England at that weight. Brown is a colored boxer.

Joe Ferraro of East Boston is willing to meet any boy in New England at 126 pounds. Nick Albanese is willing to meet any boy in New England at 115 pounds. That is fine. Any way to get Tiny Mutte sends a notice to the AMERICAN. He lives at No. 108 Maverick street, East Boston.

The semi-final match of eight rounds between Kid Solar of Spokane, Wash., and Tom Foley of South Boston at the Armory Tuesday should be a real slugging bout. Harold Walker, who is living in New Bedford at the present time, is a resident of Boston. He has lost but one bout in sixty-eight contests. His opponent, Jack Dillon, is a hard hitting Providence boy. The other bout of six rounds is between Mike Gilmore of Young Roche of the North End.

The Forbes-Brannigan fight at Terre Haute has been cancelled owing to opposition of city officials.

CITY OFFICERS TO OPEN LEAGUE

WOONSOCKET, R. I., May 13.—Governor A. J. Pothier, pitcher; Mayor James Mullen, catcher; Police Commission Chairman George Batchelor, first base; Police Commissioner James M. McCarthy, second base; Police Commissioner Aime J. Dubuc, third base; Town Clerk John H. McCabe of Burrillville, short stop; Chairman John J. Downey of the board of selectmen of Blackstone, left field; Aldermanic President Leeming Rhodes, centre field, and Senator Edward Atchison, chairman of the North Smithfield Town Council, right field, are the members of a baseball team that will take the field at Clinton Oval this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in connection with the opening ceremonies attendant upon the ushering in of the baseball season of 1911 in Woonsocket. The Burrillville champions of 1910 and the Woonsocket nine, both winners of the only games played this year, will meet in the Mill League clash that is to follow.

PACKEY M'FARLAND BEATS TOM KILBANE

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 13.—Packey McFarland of Chicago outpointed and outfought Tommy Kilbane of Cleveland in a ten-round bout before the Buffalo Athletic Association. Kilbane was pretty weak and clinching at every opportunity to save himself at the finish of the tenth round. There was never a time when Kilbane looked like a winner. He was outweighed by ten pounds at least and McFarland also had it on him in height and reach.

MARTIN'S SECONDS THROW UP SPONGE

MILWAUKEE, May 13.—Terry Martin did his best in his ten-round bout with Moha, but his best was far too weak and the "cave man" gave him such a beating that in the sixth Martin's seconds threw the towel into the ring to save the Manchester, N. H., boxer further punishment.

KLEM AND DOYLE IN TROUBLE AT BROOKLYN

There was much kicking over decisions at the St. Louis-Brooklyn game, the umpiring being Klem and Doyle. Davidson, Dahlen, Coulson and Brenahan were ordered from the field. The same umpires had no end of trouble in Boston last week.

RED SOX-TIGER FIGHT AWAITED BY THE FANS

DETROIT, May 13.—With their winning streak somewhat checked by the New York Club, which left last night after holding the Tigers to an even break in the four games played, the Tigers are prepared to make a real battle of it with the Red Sox, who arrived on the Cleveland boat this morning after a very pleasant voyage on a smooth lake.

The Tigers expect that Patsy Donovan's men will give them every bit as tough a battle as did the minions of Hal Chase. But they are willing to match speed with speed and believe that the series is going to be a slugfest from the start. Through the New York series the Tigers presented a peculiar line. They had Schaller in left field and Ness on first. Both these men are newcomers to the league, and neither is the regular occupant of the position. Jones, the regular left fielder, will be out of it for several days more, in all probability. He was hit on the head by a pitched ball while the club was in Chicago, Monday, and has a severe headache, with fits of dizziness, which are slowly yielding to treatment.

Gainor, who furnished the real sensation through the series against the Western clubs, has been forced to vacate first base for the past five games with a damaged left hand, sustained in a sliding accident. He is still unable to grasp a bat firmly.

Schaller is a peculiar player, a young Chicagoan who cavorted on the Three I League in the closing half of last season. He is a graduate of the Amos Independent Club in Chicago and is a frank copy of Frank Schulte of the Cubs, a right-hitter, left-handed and will, doubtless, be benched to allow Drake to play right garden on the afternoons that Karger and Dineen are not on the mound for the Red Sox. Drake is a right-handed batter and has been doing considerable damage to the Western South-paws on the few occasions he has been allowed to take part in the play.

Ness, the first man, was spotted out by Gainor in the race for the bag, but it was found impossible to get St. Louis to waive on him and Jennings determined to hold him for emergency. The result was his injection into the game when Gainor was hurt. He has not been batting well, though his fielding has been uniformly of a high grade. The remainder of the Tiger team which will oppose the Red Sox is known to American League fans with the exception of the pitching corps. Delehanty is covering little ground around or behind this year, but is batting opportunely. Cobb and Crawford are the speedsters of the party and have never played better ball in their lives. The former went on a rampage yesterday, spiking Hartzell and Sweeney in spread-eagle slides in which the opponents failed to yield up the entire base lines to the Georgian. He is hitting finely at present, though temporarily checked by Fisher and Ford of the Highlanders.

After Karger's Scalp.

The man the Tigers are anxious to beat is "Tex" Karger, whom they blame more than any other one pitcher for their failure to finish better off in the race of last year. While Wood and Vickers are feared, Karger is the man for whom they are laying in wait. Among the victims of the Tigers' victories have been at the expense of left handed pitchers this year and they have lost but one game to the south paws this season, the pitching in that case being done by "Doc" White of Chicago. In that case also they got vengeance later on. The lineup with Gainor and Drake in the game is a very hard one for any left hander to face. Against the Red Sox Jennings will probably use Mitchell, Works, Mullin and Willett. Great local interest attaches to the appearance of the first mentioned. He is a left hander and has been kept under cover ever since he beat the Cincinnati Reds in the early Spring, none of the Western clubs being considered favorable opportunities for his style.

Jennings believes that he has a real find in the burly Nebraskan, who came out of nowhere with an amount of stuff which has simply astounded the veteran members of the club. Stumpers is strong as yet and seems to be recovering very slowly from an attack of malaria, which prostrated him during the training trip. Willett has a doubtful aim, but says he will pitch one of the games. Lively is the Pacific Coast League's star pitcher of last year, but has been doing indifferently of late. Lafitte, who is still unbeaten this year, has had bonehits. Works is the real star of the Detroit pitching staff just now and he has discovered a change of pace which makes his old speed doubly effective. Mullin, though the possessor of a record of six won and one lost, hasn't had his best stuff at any stage of the game.

Some real pennant contenders are with us to-day. The Pirates and Reds have changed places, F. Clarke's band of Buccaneers coming in from Philadelphia and C. Getzein's Ginger Glaks departing for that staid old city.

The Rustlers did things to the Pittsburg team last year. They were among those who prevented the Pirates from winning two straight National League pennants. Buster Brown, who hasn't accomplished anything since he trimmed the Dodgers on opening day, used to have the Indian sign on these parties from Western Pennsylvania. Perhaps he will recover his winning form while they are here this trip. However, Buster isn't likely to be asked to pitch to-day, for he worked through most of the horrible snagging match of Thursday afternoon.

The Pirates look about the same as when they copped the world's championship in the Fall of 1909. Fred Clarke, Tommy Leach and Chief Wilson are still occupants of the perfectly good outfield, Bobby Byrne, Honus Wagner and Jota Miller have charge of the infield positions and the fourth—first base—is in charge of Fred Hunter, late of Kansas City, Baltimore and other points East and West. Heckenschmidt Gibson is the almost daily catcher, with Mike Ramon chief assistant.

POWERS SAID TO BE AFTER THE RUSTLERS

While President Russell continues to say with emphasis, whenever asked, that the Boston club is not for sale, he is also willing to admit that several offers have been made for the club since he and Page took it; that a price has been offered which would enable both men to retire with a financial profit; that he would sell anything if the price was sufficient. He repeats it is that Pat Powers, former president of the Eastern League, has acquired a small holding in the Boston club, and that he would be ready and willing to head a syndicate which should take over the holdings of both Russell and Page.

DAVE ALTIZER GOES TO MINNEAPOLIS

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 13.—"Handsome Nick" Altrock, the former White Sox star, has been given his unconditional release by Manager Cantillon and is expected to leave Minneapolis today. WELLS AND BROWN BATTLE OVER WEIGHT

NEW YORK, May 13.—As a result of a squabble over weight conditions the proposed bout between Knockout Brown and Matt Wells, lightweight champion of England, may be called off. Brown insists on 133 pounds; Wells wants the conditions to call for 135 pounds at 8 o'clock in the afternoon.

WONDERFUL WORK ON BASES BY COBB WON DETROIT GAME

Here is Ty Cobb's wonderful record in the baseball game at Detroit yesterday between the Tigers and the New Yorks, which he won by his dare-devil base running and hitting:

Scored from first base on Crawford's short single to right.

Scored from second base on a wild pitch.

Stole home with the winning run in the seventh while Catcher Sweeney of the Yankees was wrangling with the umpire.

Made two hits, with a total of three bags, and scored three runs.

Had five put-outs and one assist.

Just to show that he is still in the game, he spiked both Hartzell and Sweeney, thus living up to his famous reputation.

Harvard and Brown cross bats on Soldier's Field this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and in the Brunonians the Crimson is very likely to strike a pretty bad snag. For the last few years Brown has proved an annoying stumbling block to Harvard, and their record this year might lead one to believe that they might develop their former tendencies and possibly put Harvard to a humiliating rout.

At all events Coach Sexton intends to give the best he has in the twirling line to-day and Captain McLaughlin is slated to do the mound act. He is working mighty well nowadays and should hold Brown down right. It may be remembered that McLaughlin broke into the pitching game in the Brown struggle last year, and got away with a good contest.

Either Wigglesworth or Babson will take Captain McLaughlin's place in left.

Brown has had a rather erratic season thus far, but their record of having defeated and been beaten by the Tigers, shows that they are pretty good stuff when going right, and Harvard is devoutly praying that they may not be going right to-day, for this far the Crimson has not lost a scheduled game, having piled up a total of fifty-five runs to their opponents' twelve. This has been done in six games.

SPRINGFIELD, May 13. The varsity crews of the University of Pennsylvania and Yale will match strength and oars-manship in a two-mile sprint down the Connecticut river a couple of hours before sunset to-day.

It will be a case of a light veteran but beaten crew from Pennsylvania meeting a green and heavier crew from Yale. Fast time is expected, as the Connecticut will help the oarsmen along at a rate of about three miles an hour.

Yale has defeated Philadelphia with more or less success for the past dozen years, and to-day the blanket statement will be practically the guests of the Yale crew in the regatta held here, there being no opposition for any crew save the New Haven boys.

The crews are made up as follows:

Pennsylvania Berndt, bow; Hoagland, captain; Smith, number 3; Stotz, number 5; Shoemaker, number 6; Alexander, stroke; Wilkens, coxswain. Average weight, 177 pounds.

Yale—Reid, bow; Post, captain; Rooney, number 3; Adams, number 5; Gilchrist, number 6; Van Sicklen, stroke; Barnum, coxswain. Average weight, 177 pounds.

The race will start at 5 o'clock, and it is expected that the crews will cover the two miles in something like nine minutes.

While their elders are going to it down on Yale Field, the Harvard and Yale freshmen meet in the Stadium this afternoon in their annual track meet. The games start at 2:30 o'clock. The Harvard boys have had some hard luck from sickness and injuries that has kept their men out of the game this season, but all of them have now rounded back into shape and are out to do their best this afternoon.

Advertising a Collar

The uses of advertising in the merchandising of goods are manifold. New things are not only being advertised each day, but new markets are being created for goods which seem to be remote from the influence of advertising.

Take the case of a well-known collar. This was cut in such a way that when turned down it had all the style required by the most fastidious, but when turned up it became a perfect protection against rain, and converted the coat of which it was a part into an admirable raincoat.

The trade was slow to take it up. Not until the inventor began advertising did the trade adopt it on a scale that was profitable to the inventor. The inventor went to the Public, pictured the collar on a garment turned down and turned up, gave it a trade-marked name and explained its advantages through national advertising.

It was advertised to the trade. Little by little the trade saw how much easier it would be to sell garments with the collar than without, and cutter-up after cutter-up adopted it, until now the inventor, as well as the trade, has realized a valuable bananza.

All of which goes to show that the public can be educated to the use of new things by advertising. In fact, the value of advertising is largely educational in creating wider markets for old commodities or staples or in creating new markets for new commodities.

The newspaper, because of its daily issues, as well as because of large circulation, permits the insertion of advertising more frequently than any other medium, and as oftentimes the frequency of a salesman's visits affects the marketing of the goods, so the frequency of the appearance of the advertising moves the consumer more quickly to buy.

Most of the large advertisers use the Hearst newspapers. In the New England field the Boston American has a circulation of almost 400,000 daily. The largest department stores are using it with larger and larger space. Any merchant who contemplates advertising can address to advantage The Trade Aid Department, Boston American.

A SUCCESSFUL WIFE

The Story of an American Girl and How She Helped Her Husband Win

A Really Great Novel by G. Dorset. Copyright, 1910, by Harper & Brothers.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

ESTHER CAREY, a poor girl, whose father died when she was fifteen, and whose mother died soon after, leaving her with the care of five younger children, determined to face the world bravely, earn her own way and support the little family. They lived in Bracketsville, a New Jersey suburb of the great metropolis of New York.

She answers an advertisement and begins life as a stenographer in a Wall Street office at $5 a week. After a year she is raised to $10 a week and succeeds in getting her sister Fanny a place at $5 a week.

Things go on well until she loses her position and then follow six black weeks of unemployment.

Finally she answers another advertisement which takes her to a Fifth avenue mansion, where Mrs. William Falsworth, prominent in civic associations and boards of missions, hires her to work as an amanuensis.

At twenty-five she finds herself in charge of her own office force—with two rooms on the tenth floor of a Wall Street skyscraper. She clears net $1,200 a year.

Among her rich patrons are Senator Bellars and Mrs. Falsworth. Her work takes her often to the home of the Fifth avenue woman. She begins to find that Falsworth is not happy with his wife.

Falsworth is interested in promoting the Wildwood Mine, in the West. He meets Esther and falls in love with her. Before starting for the West, one day, he says: "Esther, I want a real woman for a wife." He asks her to go away with him, but she refuses.

When he is gone Senator Bellars sends for her and dictates a letter to his nephew, Stephen Kirkland, offering him a position in New York if he will give up his life in Europe, where he is studying art, and, according to the Senator, "going to the devil."

Kirkland accepts the Senator's offer and comes to New York. He is a big, brown, sun-burned man, with a beard and bearing very appearance of an artist.

Kirkland brings Esther some work to do and calls for it while he is under the influence of liquor. He makes her go for a walk with him and they sit down on a park bench, where he talks poetry to her and flatly goes to sleep.

The next day a big bunch of flowers reaches Esther, and immediately afterward Will Falsworth walks into the office. She thanks him for the flowers, and a storm comes when he declares he never sent them and demands to know "who the other man is." Esther tells one of her girls to throw the flowers out of the window.

CHAPTER VII.
Kirkland Calls

THE next week Sunday was one of those awfully hot days, and I got up early to go out and breathe. Night was the only time I had to see about my own affairs, and sometimes I couldn't sleep, thinking about them and thinking about Will. I walked down to the pond this morning early, before the gun got red hot. It was lovely at 8 o'clock, and I sat there and thought how queer it was that Will Falsworth should just happen to be married. I knew that it was all very, very wrong.

I got rested in the nice air, and by-and-by climbed down into the old scow and pushed out to pick some water-lilies to fetch home.

I remember very well what I had on that day—a plain blue wash-dress, with a blue belt, and it was fresh and fitted me.

As I started home, Fanny was coming along the path to find me, and she met me at the corner of the street.

"Say, Esther," she said, as soon as we met, "you've got a caller."

My heart beat, for I was sure it was Will Falsworth, and I was awfully frightened.

"Is it?"

"I don't know, but he's awfully stylish. He's sitting on the porch with the boys."

And there they were all sitting around rocking and talking—Mr. Kirkland and the little boys. Mr. Kirkland was perfectly at home. I introduced him to Fanny. He looked tired out, his linen wasn't very tidy, his hair was too long, his beard wasn't trimmed, and his old clothes needed all kinds of care.

"I've been telling these boys about Ulysses, Miss Carey. We were just coming out of the Cyclops' cave, the lot of us."

The boys were shy, and not used to having stories told them. "And you can go on with the adventure after you have rested a bit "remote."

"There's something about it,' he went on, "that brings me peace."

He asked me about the population and the climate, and then smoked for a little while. I didn't know what to say. I must have been wondering why he had come out, when he asked me:

"What are you thinking of, Madonna of the lilies?"

Laughed Out Loud

And when I said I was wondering if he had brought me extra work to do, he laughed out loud.

"Work! Does Labor pursue us even to this garden—to this temple—to this Elysium?"

He took a fresh cigarette and lit that, while the other was still going, and threw the old one down and stamped it out. It looked dreadfully untidy on the piazza, but I didn't say anything.

"You think I am a little crazy, don't you, Miss Carey?"

"No, not at all."

"Come, now, what do you think? Tell me."

He hadn't the least idea how timid I was or how embarrassed—how, knowing all I did about him, it seemed too strange for anything to have him sit there, smiling and going on.

"Come, what do you think?"

"I think you're joking."

"Never mind—never mind. I won't bother you about it. Only, I am not joking; crazy, perhaps, and all the rest, but I'm the most deadly serious person you ever saw, my dear girl."

Although he called me these queer names, his manners were delightful. He had a way of bowing like a king.

"I would like to live in this wilderness, Miss Carey—have a tent here and dream."

I said Bracketsville didn't seem much like a wilderness to me—it was too hot and noisy; and Mr. Kirkland replied that the term was relative.

"The mid-Sahara is full of voices, and there is no greater wilderness than the human heart."

Then he asked about each of the boys, and where they went to school, how old they were, and what they wanted to do. I told him as soon as they had finished the public school we would get them work in New York.

"One of them—Tommy, I think—wants to go to West Point."

My smile was a little sour then.

"And the others want to be kings," I said, "don't they?"

Mr. Kirkland looked reproachfully at me. "Well, they didn't tell me so."

The Man Who Tried to Manufacture Gold

By THOMAS TAPPER

I.

MANY a man works hard at dishonest employment. The skill that produces a counterfeit twenty-dollar bill so near to perfection that it deceives even the paying teller at the bank could be turned to profitable use.

The counterfeiter and the burglar THINK. They often think so hard that it takes the intense thoughts of a lot of men to catch them.

Why does a man turn his thought to a swindling or dishonest job?

There are two reasons.

The first is, he feels impelled to do something. That is human nature. And no one will deny that some burglars and counterfeiters have shown themselves equal to wonderful strategy and skill. Now, strategy and skill are brains in action.

The second reason is that the moral vision is out of focus. These men do not see things in right relation. They misunderstand a few important matters. They fail to see that the energy, in a man, is divine energy; that divine energy should be put to a good use; that divine energy put to a good use makes a man as divine as he wants to be.

WANTS TO BE mind you.

The will is that power in a man that permits him to understand life or to misunderstand it—as he chooses.

Now, suppose a nation, say the United States of America, should wake up some day and say:

The greatest asset we possess is men and women.

Some of our men and women have brains that do not serve this country.

But they have brains. That is the important thing.

Hence it will pay us to establish a commission that will study these people and their impulses, AND TURN THEIR ENERGY TO GOOD ENDS.

If we could apply this principle, we should discover that evil is good turned the wrong way.

And that is all there is to evil, and to the Devil, and all the other things of the World of Darkness. They are goodness headed in the wrong direction.

II.

You have heard the word ALCHEMIST. Leave off the first syllable and you have the word CHEMIST.

The suggestions of the two words are quite different. The alchemist spent his life trying to turn copper and other cheap metals into gold. The chemist spends his life learning the truths of nature.

There was once a man who turned his mind to both these pursuits. This man was a wig. And the wig helped him to knock alchemy out of his head and to become a chemist.

This man's name was Johann Friedrich Boettgher. He was born in 1685. About that time William Penn was making a land trade with the Indians under an elm tree that grew near the Delaware River.

When Boettgher was twelve years old he went to work for an apothecary in Berlin. When he had any spare time he used it to make experiments. All his experiments had one object—to make gold out of other metals. This was energy.

After a few years he told his master that he had succeeded. The apothecary and his friends went into the laboratory and watched the apprentice. The young man dropped a piece of copper into the crucible, and, with a few skilful motions, added to the mixing and the boiling, took out a piece of gold. The same thing is done nowadays, only instead of copper and gold the man uses a silk hat and a rabbit.

Despite the fact that there was no telephone or telegraph in those days, the news spread quickly, and people rushed into Berlin to see the "gold cook." Everybody was interested in gold. Even the King was curious about the matter, and concluded that if he could control this young man and lock him up in a fortress he could have all the gold he wanted and be a King among Kings.

That was energy on the King's part.

III.

Boettgher heard of the King's intentions and disappeared. A reward of about $730 was offered for him. But by losing no time the young man arrived safely in Saxony, and put himself under the protection of the Elector, Friedrich August.

Now it happened that Friedrich August was in need of money. Boettgher arrived in Dresden, and then began to press him for the secret by letter, from Poland, of which country the Elector was King.

Boettgher sent the King a small bottle containing a reddish liquid, with directions. The King put on an old suit and a leather apron, locked himself up in a room and went to work.

The first experiments failed.

Then the King read the directions again.

This time he observed one item that he had overlooked in his anxiety to begin. It was this:

"This liquid must be used in great purity of heart."

His Royal Highness remembered that he had been out the night before pursuing a good time, so he purified his heart and began again.

No gold appeared, and the King promised to hang Boettgher if he failed to make gold. But he did not carry out his threat, probably for fear that he would also hang the secret.

IV.

Then a man in Dresden said to Boettgher one day: "If you can't make gold, why don't you try porcelain? There is money in that."

Being a man of energy, Boettgher dropped the "gold cook" business and then turned his attention to red clay.

He succeeded in making a beautiful red porcelain, but he knew that before he could claim success he must discover how to make his dishes white. His wig rested heavily on his head that morning. Calling his valet, he asked:

"Hans, what makes my wig so heavy?"

"Sir, it is the white powder which I sprinkled on it."

"Hans, bring me a box of the powder, and be quick about it."

When he had analyzed the powder he found that it was made of a white clay. With this Kaolin he began to work on the red clay and when he was twenty-two years of age he produced his first successful piece of white porcelain.

This was the beginning of the famous Dresden china, an industry that has been worth far more than a real gold mine.

Boettgher died at thirty-five. He had been virtually a prisoner of the King all his life, and as a final tribute to the slavery in which he was kept the King ordered that he be buried AT NIGHT.

It was a lucky day for him when his friend mentioned porcelain, for it turned his skilful and abundant energy from a swindling operation to one which has enriched Dresden and delighted the hearts of those who love fine chinaware.

Symptoms of Eczema

The moist form of eczema is most common. The affected parts are swollen and tender, with a reddened, raw appearance, covered with a thin, dark crust, through which a gummy liquid appears. Itching is nearly always present. The treatment is to stop the itching, exclude the air and germs, and set up the healing process by applying Cadum, the new skin remedy. You can see and feel a marked improvement after a single application, and the surface of the skin rapidly resumes a healthy condition. Cadum is also remarkably effective in other skin troubles such as redness, pimples, rash, blotches, roughness, scaly skin, chilblains, acne, sores, ulcers, eruptions, sores, tetter, itch, herpes, psoriasis, itching piles, etc. Trial box, 10c.

At Mrs. Dolan's Boarding House

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

In Which Ruth Unpacks Her Trunk and Goes Down to Her First Meal.

IT WAS 5 o'clock when the express man deposited Ruth's trunk in her skylight room.

Where'd I put it, miss?"

There was really no place to put it, except at the foot of the bed, which left hardly enough room to pass between it and the wash stand.

"Well, there you are," wiping his face on his sleeve.

Ruth handed him the 50 cents she had taken from her purse.

He shook his head. "That's seventy-five. I wouldn't tug no trunk up all those stairs for 50 cents."

"But the man at the office said it would be fifty."

"Maybe he did, but he didn't know it was goin' to the top o' the house. I'll not take no 50 cents for that job."

Ruth hesitated and then gave him the extra quarter. When he had gone, she unstrapped and unlocked her trunk with anxious thoughts. How fast her little hoard of money was going! Everything cost so much more than she expected.

Even when she carefully bargained in advance, as she had about the trunk—still it was always more. Perhaps she shouldn't have given him the extra quarter. But she never had the courage to argue about money.

If she could only feel sure of her position! But she had been taken only on trial, and would not know until the end of the month whether or not they would keep her. She had secured the position through an employment agency to whom she must pay a fee.

Some one came running up the steps now, and into the room adjoining hers, whistling loudly a popular air. Who was on this floor? she wondered. Mrs. Dolan had said that all the rooms were filled. She supposed she would meet them at dinner. It would be the first dinner she had ever had in a boarding house, and she looked forward to it with nervous dread.

Hurriedly she unpacked her trunk, slinking out the few simple dresses and hanging them on the door behind the curtain. Her comb, brush, powder box and bottle of cologne water she carefully arranged on the bureau. There was no mantel; so the nickel alarm clock, a few photographs and a bill-book also went on the bureau.

A small dictionary, a Bible, a stenographer's handbook and an English grammar went into the washstand drawer. The rest of her things she left to unpack after dinner.

There was only one gas jet in the room; it was without a globe and gave only a feeble light. She picked at it with a hat pin. It flared up higher for a moment and then dropped back again to its narrow forked blaze.

Some one else came up the stairs now, not whistling. Their step seemed dragged and wearied, as they entered a room farther down the hall. Ruth wondered who it was. Her fancy pictured an oldish man, tall and stoop-shouldered.

Ruth's imagination was always most vivid. She had a trick of picturing the whole personality from just the sound of a voice or a footstep. Her impressions were not always correct, but they were always interesting.

Now came the shrill clanging of a bell from below. The dinner bell! Ruth hurriedly looked up her watch. She had not realized it was already after six.

Anxiously she scanned herself in the mirror, smoothed her hair and readjusted her collar. Took a fresh handkerchief from the tray of the trunk, sprinkled it with a drop of the toilet water, lowered the farked blaze of the gas and hurried down stairs.

What would it be like? Who were the people she was about to meet? On the floor below a woman came out of the front room, slammed the door and ran down ahead of her.

At the door of the basement dining room Ruth paused in embarrassment. Where was she to sit? She looked anxiously around for Mrs. Dolan, but she was not there. Minnie, the colored girl, rushed by with a tray, but without even glancing toward her.

One long table and two small ones filled the room. The small tables were full, but there were several vacant seats at the long table. The boarders were now looking up at her curiously as she stood hesitatingly by the door. The color deepened in her face. Again Minnie passed by and Ruth tried to catch her eye, but could not.

And then, feeling that anything would be better than the awkwardness of standing there, Ruth slipped into the nearest chair.

To a moment Minnie came up. "That's mar seat," briefly. "You'll have to sit over there," motioning with her head, as her hands were full, to a vacant place on the opposite side.

And Ruth, miserably conscious of her flushed face, had to walk around the table to the place indicated.

Then Minnie put a plate of soup before her, with her usual glib query of:

"Roast beef or roast lamb?"

"Roast beef," Ruth answered timidly.

And her life at Mrs. Dolan's boarding house had begun.

THEY MAY LAST THE SHIP BUT THEY SHALL NOT SAVE THE GIRL I LOVE! SWEETHEART! I'M NO COWARD!

Desperate Desmond has planned a diabolical revenge upon Claude and Rosamond and the sailors of the U. S. S. Dauntless. He is going to blow up the powder magazine, and he doesn't care if the explosion kills everybody on board, except himself. He expects to beat it before the long fuse burns down to where the powder is.

In the meantime, Claude and Rosamond have decided to get married. They are going to Jericho, and when they return the chaplain will perform the ceremony that will make Claude responsible for Rosamond's dressmaking bills for the rest of his life. The poor boy will have to go to work. There's no money in the hero business.

As the sailors lower the boat down to the water, the bottom of it strikes Desperate Desmond, who is jumping out through a porthole in order that he may be away from there when the explosion takes place. But now the sailors will take him on board again, and if he's anything doing in the explosion line, he'll be right in it.

We thought Desmond was a game guy in spite of his crookedness, but it seems he is afflicted with cold feet. He is not willing to sacrifice his own life, even for the sake of getting revenge on Claude and Rosamond, so he warns the sailors that the magazine is about to blow up, and they immediately get busy to stop it.

When the sailors run to put out the fuse, which has by this time burned down perilously close to the powder, they let go of the rope by which they were hauling the boat up, with the result that it immediately drops back into the water. Very careless of them, to be sure, but you must remember they are in an awful hurry.

As the boat falls, it tips over, spilling its occupants into the water. This is just the opportunity Desmond has been looking for. While the others are still wondering where they are at, he grabs Rosamond and swims away. It ought to be easy to catch him, but don't be too sure about it until you see Monday's pictures.

THE DE BERCY AFFAIR

The Romance of a Millionaire and a Beautiful French Singer

A Fascinating Mystery Story by Gordon Holmes. Copyright, 1910, by E. J. Clode

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS

MADEMOISELLE DE BERCY, a favorite of the stage, who came to London recently from her triumphs in Paris and won her way into the best circles in the fashionable West End, is found shockingly murdered in her luxurious apartments at the Feldisham Mansions.

All London is mystified by the crime and interest is lent to the affair by the fact that Rupert Osborne, a rich young member of the American colony, who believed her story that she came of noble French lineage, was about to marry Mlle. de Bercy. He was known to have called upon her late in the afternoon, a short time before she was found lifeless in her room.

Chief Inspector Winter, of Scotland Yard, learns, however, that Osborne has established a complete alibi.

Winter learns that Mademoiselle de Bercy is really Mirabel Armand, the daughter of a peasant in Jersey.

Furneaux, the best detective on Winter's staff, is inexplicably absent, and the case is given into the hands of Detective Clarke, who has discovered a taxicab driver who says he took a man closely resembling Osborne to Miss de Bercy's apartments about 7:30 o'clock on the night of the murder.

Winter takes the case out of Clarke's hands and goes to Feldisham Mansions himself, only to find Furneaux in possession of the place, and strangely agitated. He admits he knew Rose de Bercy, as Mirabel Armand, in Jersey, years ago. He is unusually uncommunicative and his manner puzzles his chief.

Clarke has found a prehistoric axe-head, with which the woman's face was mutilated, but Furneaux declares the death wound was dealt with a dagger-like weapon through the right eye. He is not enthusiastic in the belief that Osborne committed the crime.

To get rid of Clarke, Winter assigns him to watch two Anarchists, Janoc and Descartes.

Meanwhile, London looks upon Osborne as the criminal. Rose de Bercy is believed to have been a adventuress, of whom he wished to be rid.

A strange phase of the case is the report that Mlle. de Bercy was in some way or other connected with the Anarchist Society of France.

Winter calls upon Osborne and assures him that he believes him innocent. Then he advises him to hide himself for a while under an assumed name in some small outside town. Osborne goes to Yarmouth, where he registers at the Swan Hotel as R. Glyn, London. Walking along the cliff, he four sitts on a rock and he falls at the feet of a girl who is sketching on the beach.

CHAPTER V.
The Missing Blade

ON that same morning of the meeting on the sands at Yarmouth, Inspector Clarke, walking southward down St. Martin's Lane toward Scotland Yard, had a shock. Clarke was hardly at the moment in his best mood, for to the natural vinegar of his temperament a drop of lemon, or of gall, had been added within the last few days. That morning at breakfast he had explained matters with a sour mouth to Mrs. Clarke.

"Oh, it was all a made-up job between Winter and Furneaux, and I was only put on to the Anarchists to make room for Furneaux—that was it. The two Anarchists weren't up to any mischief—'Anarchists' was all a blind, that's what 'Anarchists' was. But that's the way things are run now in the Yard, and there's no fair play going any more. Furneaux must have Feldisham Mansions, of course; Furneaux this, and Furneaux that—of course. But wait; he hasn't solved it yet! and he isn't going to; no, and I haven't done with it, yet, not by a long way. . . . Now, where do you buy these eggs? Just look at this one."

The fact was, now that the two Anarchists, Descartes and Janoc, had been deported by the Court, and were gone, Clarke suddenly woke to find himself disillusioned, dull, excluded from the fun of the chase. But, as he was passing down St. Martin's Lane that morning, his underlooking eyes, ever on the prowl for the "confidence men" who haunt the West End, saw a sight that made him doubt if he was awake. There, in a little bystreet to the east, under the three balls of a pawnbroker's, he saw, or dreamt that he saw—Emile Janoc!—Janoc, whom he knew to be in Holland, and Janoc was so deep, so lost, in talk with a girl, that he could not see Clarke standing there, looking at him.

And Clarke knew the girl, too! It was Bertha Seward, the late cook of the murdered actress, Rose de Bercy.

Could he be mistaken as to Janoc? he asked himself. Could two men be so striking to the eye, and so alike—the lank figure, stooping; the long wavering legs, the clothes hanging loose on him; the scraggy throat with the bone in it; the hair, black and plenteous as the raven's breast, draping the sallow-dark face; the eyes so haggard, hungry, unresting. Few men were so picturesque; so few so greasy, repellent. And there could be no mistake as to Bertha Seward—a small, thin creature, with whitish hair, and little Chinese eyes that seemed to twinkle with fun—it was she.

Looked Eye to Eye.

And how earnest was the talk!

Clarke saw Janoc clasp his two long hands together, and turn up his eyes to the sky, seeming to beseech the girl or, through her, the heavens. Then he offered her money, which she refused; but, when he coaxed and blustered, she took it, smiling. Shaking hands, they parted, and Janoc looked after Bertha Seward as she hurried, with a sort of stealthy haste, towards the Strand. Then he turned, and found himself face to face with Clarke.

For a full half-minute they looked contemptuously, eye to eye, at one another.

"Janoc?" said Clarke.

"That is my name for one moment, sare," said Janoc politely in a very peculiar though fluent English; "and the yours, sare?"

"Unless you have a very bad memory you know mine! How on earth come you to be here, Emile Janoc?"

"England is free country, sare," said Janoc with a shrug; "I was not the why I must render you account of movement. Only I tell you this time, because you are so singular familiarity with my name of family, you deceive yourself as to my little name. I have, it is true, a brother named Emile——"

Clarke looked with a hard eye at him.

The resemblance, if they were two, was certainly very strong. Since it seemed all but impossible that Emile Janoc should be in England, he accepted the statement gruffly.

"Perhaps you wouldn't mind letting me see your papers?" he asked.

Janoc bowed.

"That I will do with big pleasure, sare," he said, and produced a passport recently vised in Holland, by which it appeared that his name was not Emile, but Gaston.

They parted with a bow on Janoc's side and a nod on Clarke's; but Clarke was puzzled.

"Something queer about this," he thought. "I'll keep my eye on him. . . . What was he doing talking like that—so earnest—to the actress's cook? Suppose she was murdered by Anarchists! It is certain that she was more or less mixed up with them—more, perhaps, than is known. Why did those two come over the night after her murder?—for it's clear that they had no design against the Tsar. I'll talk it to my pal, Furneaux. Now, Clarke, my boy, and may be you'll come out ahead of Furneaux, Winter, and all the lot in the end."

When he arrived at his Chief's office in the Yard, he mentioned to Winter his curious encounter with the other Janoc, but said not a word of Bertha Seward, since the affair of the murder was no longer his business, officially.

Winter paid little heed to Janoc, whether Emile or Gaston, for Furneaux was there with him, and the two were bend to head, discussing the murder, and the second sitting of the inquest was soon to come. Indeed, Clarke heard Winter say to Furneaux:

"I promised Mr. Osborne to give some sort of excuse to his servants for his flight from home. I was so busy that I forgot it. Perhaps you will see to that, too, for me?"

"Glad you mentioned it. I intended, going there at once," Furneaux said in that subdued tone which seemed to have all at once come upon him since Rose de Bercy was found lying dead in Feldisham Mansions.

"Well, then, from henceforth everything is in your hands," said Winter. "Have I hand you ever our dumb witness"—and he held out to Furneaux the blood-soiled axe-head of flint that had battered Rose de Bercy's face.

Found Miss Prout.

He was not sure—he wondered afterwards whether it was positively a fact—but he fancied that for the tenth part of a second Furneaux shrank from taking, from touching, that object of horror—a notion so odd and fantastic that it affected Winter as if he had fancied that the poker had lifted its head for the tenth part of a second. But almost before the conceit took form, Furneaux was coolly placing the exit in his breast-pocket, and standing up to go.

Furneaux drove straight, as he had said, to Mayfair, and soon was being ushered into Osborne's library, where he found Miss Frost, the secretary, with her hat on, busy opening and sorting the morning's correspondence.

To Be Continued Monday.

Do They Ever Love Equally?

By DOROTHY DIX

A MAN writes me a very interesting letter, in which he says that he is deeply and passionately in love with a woman who does not love him as he loves her. He writes:

"I am eager to set sail on the sea of matrimony. I have the 'coal' and the 'provisions,' but only half the cargo, and the most important half, at that, is lacking. And the ship of love, I think, should be owned in common, for marriage is a partnership, and each should put in the same amount of cargo.

"My part of the cargo of love is there, and it is boundless. It filled my half of the ship in one mad rushing instant.

"I was ready to start immediately, but would it have been wise? Wouldn't a ship loaded all on one side go under before she ever cleared the docks? I thought so, but while I hesitated my love for HER kept growing, until now it fills the whole ship from stem to stern, and from port to starboard.

"I am not afraid of its capsizing now, but I still think, for the sake of her own happiness, she should put in her half of love, even if we have to get a ship twice as big.

"Love is the most wonderful of God's creation, but just as the rain could not descend forever, if the clouds did not get a fresh supply of water from the sea, so love, if it is to live, must be fed by love.

Do They Love Equally

"This is my philosophy, but I wonder if it isn't rare for two people to love each other equally?

"I wonder if, in most marriages, the love isn't nearly all on one side or the other?

"I wonder if it isn't almost an impossible to make some one love you, who doesn't, as it is to stop loving the one you do love?

"Can you answer these questions?"

I cannot. Only Cupid, himself, can solve the riddle of love, and tell this wonderful lover whether it will be wise or better, in which he says that he is deeply and passionately in love with a woman who does not love him as he loves her. He writes:

"I am eager to set sail on the sea of matrimony. I have the 'coal' and the 'provisions,' but only half the cargo, and the most important half, at that, is lacking. "I wonder if it isn't almost an impossible to make some one love you, who doesn't, as it is to stop loving the one you do love?

"Can you answer these questions?"

Yes, it is up to him to set the limit. Some of the most devoted wives I have even known started out with little more than a great respect and a warm friendship for their husbands.

As the years went on, and they became more deeply possible of all their husbands' goodness to them, this friendship quickened into almost adoration, and, at forty, these women were more romantically in love than they were at twenty.

My correspondent fears that if he marries a woman who is not as deeply in love with him as he is with her, her coldness will blight and kill his affection. This is a groundless fear. On the contrary, the one infallible recipe for keeping a man's love at its very best is to make the love chase never ending.

Why Love Dies

More love dies from fatty degeneration of the heart, because it gets no exercise, than from any other cause. It is the couple who are absolutely sure of each other's devotion who take no trouble to please each other, who let romance and sentiment go by the boards, who take liberties in neglecting each other and abolishing the amenities of life who suddenly wake up some day to find out that all of their romance is gone and their dreams broken through.

To the man who is more in love with his wife than he is with him, this can never happen; because his wife will be one perpetual courtship to him, and he will never lose interest in love because he will always be trying to win it.

As to my correspondent's last query: Whether it is not almost inevitable that one or the other of a married couple should love the better I can only reply "Yes." There is nothing truer than the old French proverb that says, "In marriage one kisses, and the other presents himself or herself to be kissed."

But does it matter? Is love so niggardly that it demands its pound of flesh? And who shall say which one has the best of the bargain, the one who gives or the one who receives?

For it is a misfortune not to have loved; but it is a tragedy never to have loved.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

MRS. LYSANDER JOHN APPLETON discovered, the other evening, that her son had told a falsehood but, as she had prepared and read convincing and exhaustive papers on "The Boy Child Mind" for seventeen literary societies, and had been quoted in leading magazines as an authority on the subject, she had no doubts of her fitness to cope with the situation.

"You are like your father," she said in the beginning of her attack, "You are an Appleton!"

To the uninitiated this may not mean much, but to those who understand feminine logic, it means volumes. To tell Chauncey Devere he was an Appleton meant, to his mother, that he came of common origin; that he was of a race that sprang from obscurity, and that had been redeemed from utter oblivion by the marriage of Lysander John with a Montmorency.

To tell her son he was an Appleton was to sound the death knell on all hope for ambition; he was born of a Montmorency, it is true, but being unable to overcome the handicap of being an Appleton, she flung him back to the dump heap of obscurity.

Mrs. Appleton had talked for forty-five minutes to her son on the wickedness of telling a falsehood, when the postman appeared with a letter. It was from a cousin announcing that, if convenient, she would come for a visit.

The Spring housecleaning had been done, all the family were in good health, there was no date with dentist or dressmaker, and the automobile had an extra seat. What would Mother reply, wondered Chauncey Devere.

"I shall write and tell her," said Mrs. Appleton grimly, "that your father has a broken leg, the house needs cleaning, you are coming down with measles, and I am in bed with nervous prostration."

His mother, a Montmorency, told a lie!

"I washed them with Fels-Naptha," replied the pretty maid.

Most labor-savers cost money.

A new-fangled washer, an electric sad iron or a gas range mean you have to pay out a good sum to start with.

But Fels-Naptha Soap will save you more work than all these other things put together and it costs no more than other soaps.

Labor-saving and economy are combined in Fels-Naptha.

And labor is not the only thing saved.

When you wash with Fels-Naptha Soap the Fels-Naptha way, in cool or lukewarm water, it saves the clothes.

No boiling to soften them; no hard rubbing to wear them out.

They last twice as long.

No matter how big the washing is, it doesn't take half as long as if you boiled and hard-rubbed the clothes.

They'll be sweeter, whiter and cleaner.

Isn't it worth trying?

Be sure and use cool or lukewarm water in Winter or Summer—no boiling—according to directions on the red and green wrapper.

Plain Cookies

These are "the cookies that mother used to make," but she never made them with skimmed milk; she used rich cream. You can get the same result if you use Borden's Evaporated Milk—adds richness and fine flavor.

RECIPE

Beat two heaping tablespoonfuls butter to a cream; add gradually one cup sugar, and beat again. Then add two well beaten eggs, four tablespoonfuls Borden's Evaporated Milk diluted with three-fourths cup water, one teaspoonful baking powder, one half teaspoonful grated nutmeg and flour enough to make a moderately soft dough. Mix thoroughly, roll, cut with a round cutter and bake a light brown in a moderate oven.

All Grocers 5 and 10 cent. cans.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

STOCKS SHOW FALLING OFF

STATE STREET, May 13.—Closing—Both the New York and Boston markets closed at fractional recession from opening prices after a most featureless and dull day during which only 69,000 shares were traded in.

Tips were circulated that there would be a squeeze of shorts before the close, but it failed to appear, and in its stead there was some further selling of Steel. This was said to be liquidation by large holders. There were also some sales of Reading, Union and Southern Pacific, but what helped to offset unconfirmed rumors that there was no intention to make the new issue of Pipe Steel bonds at present. Cotton Oil suggested because of less optimistic reports as to the outlook for the cotton crop. The demand for Erie, which has been a feature recently, was lacking as the stock pushed to offerings. Philadelphia Company advanced a point on rumors of increased earnings. Trading consisted mostly of wheels of switching by professionals on the floor and fluctuations were very narrow, as everybody was waiting to see what Monday would bring in the way of important Court decisions.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

The ever popular strawberry is getting cheaper. Berries are now coming principally from Virginia, and in a short time New Jersey "two-for-a-quarter" boxes will arrive. At present they sell at from twenty to thirty cents a box. The new crop from northern Virginia draw the higher price.

Mackerel are cheaper. Fine bloaters, which sold for ninety cents each last week, are selling for sixty cents this week. Fine fresh mackerel now in the market are caught in the vicinity of Cape Hatteras and delivered from the vessels at Newport News, Va.

Shad are very cheap. Fresh caught Jack salmon are selling for fifteen cents each, and Southern roe shad sell for the same price.

Asparagus is very fine and very cheap this season. Fine large California asparagus sells for twenty-five cents a bunch, and native "grass" for from fifteen to thirty cents.

Cucumbers are selling for high prices. The largest forcing-house cost nine cents each, and the best fifteen cents. Hothouse English cucumbers sell for thirty cents each.

The new potatoes coming from the South this Spring are of rather poor quality and sell for high prices. The retail prince being about thirty cents a half peck.

ALLOW 37 ALIENS TO GO TO CANADA

There was great rejoicing in the detention pen for immigrants on Long Wharf this morning when thirty-seven lonely women and children were told they would not be deported to Europe but would be allowed to go to their destinations in Canada. The party had returned to Boston from ten days to a month ago because of their inability to comply with Canadian immigration laws.

To-day, after a conference with Immigration Commissioner Billings, Superintendent Wilson of Canada decided to let the detained people cross the border. Those left for many points in Canada on early trains this morning were Mrs. Mary Schaake and five children and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Lehmenstrueder, and children, left for Winnipeg, Manitoba, to join her husband. Mrs. Maria Rosenbaum, of Rotterdam, is on the way to her husband in Berlin, Manitoba, with six children.

DR. VAN DYKE WILL STAY AT PRINCETON

PRINCETON, May 13.—Dr Henry Van Dyke, the famous educator, author and publicist, is to remain at Princeton University as Murray professor of English literature. The resignation he filed last November, causing much conjecture as to why he desired to sever his connection with the university, has been withdrawn upon assurance from a committee of the Board of Trustees that there was no basis for the charge that Dr. Van Dyke sought to be president of Princeton.

The Boston American has its own correspondent in the Porcupine gold mining camp of Northern Ontario and will, on each Sunday, give the latest and most important developments of that coming mining region. To-morrow's American will contain some very interesting reading on this district.

———On Woman's Body There Is a Special Thin Layer of Fat.

King Manuel Shows Himself a New Kind of Goose.

Matrimony Is Sufficient Grounds for Divorce---AND

There Was Once a "Goddess of Fat," Worshipped as We Worship Skinny Goddesses Now.

Here Indeed You Have Wonders in Plenty, for This Is the Vestibule of the Wonder House Which—but Read On.

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal Examiner

GENIUS consists—partially—in doing some good work yourself and in being able to enjoy the good work that others do.

To-day let us enjoy the discoveries and announcements of the scientific and other geniuses of the world.

Underground, at Malta, there has been discovered a temple devoted to the worship of fat Goddesses. Five most extremely fat heathen Goddess ladies sit in one row—mountains of flesh and fat—in real life such women would weigh at least eight hundred pounds. Each of them is a mass of rolling, mountainous curves and—most remarkable—the temple itself is built in strange roomy curves that make it look like a fat temple.

Do you know that to this day the Hottentots adore and by preference marry the most outrageously fat women. They used to show at the Jardin des Plantes in Paris an exact reproduction of the "Hottentot Venus," who died in Paris under distressing circumstances, and many thousands of little French boys gazed upon her reproduction with mixed emotions, sincerely believing that she was stuffed.

Now far a cry, dear readers, from that Hottentot Venus—not less than nine feet around the hips—and from these fat Goddesses of the underground temple to the wispy Venuses of to-day, with their shadowy shapes and unsubstantial entities. If we could get a sort of half way compromise between the Hottentot Venus and the North American Goddess of Bones how fine it would be—but we can't. (The Hottentot Venus, by the way, was fattened on camel's milk.)

Men used to adore, living and as Goddesses, the very fattest women for two reasons:

First, they thought that fat was pretty.

Second, if the worst came to the worst—very far back—they used to eat a wife or two to avoid starvation—so a very fat wife was a joy alive and insurance against famine when dead.

OFTEN you have wished that you were a King—or some one you know has wished it. Wish it no more. Rather study the follies of Kings and rejoice that you are a noble American sovereign with a coat-of-living-problem instead of a diadem. King George is worrying about his crowning—taking lessons so that he won't fall over his robe. The Turkish Sultan is watching for murderers as Americans for baseball news, and King Manuel, formerly of Portugal, and now kicked out for Portugal's good, has just been dropped heartlessly by the object of his affections—because she found an English Duke richer than any King. Imagine being a King, even a kicked-out one, and having someone named Mademoiselle Radet tell you to run along and not bother her. The latest folly and sorrow of King Manuel shows that Kings are beginning to reach their proper level.

DO you know why woman can sit in a freezing draft with low neck, no sleeves and only a lace shirtwaist between her body and zero weather? Professor Adolph von Huebner of the Royal Academy of Vienna tells you. Over woman's entire body—even the skinniest woman's body—there exists a continuous layer of fat—very thin in some places, but still there, and covering every inch of her; thus while she seems to sit in zero weather exposed to the blast, she is really sitting in a snug blanket of fat, reaching from the top of her head to the soles of her feet. Men lack this blanket, and that is why the two hundred and fifty pound man would die, if he tried to dress in Winter as his eighty-pound daughter dresses when she goes to a party.

Where did woman get the fat blanket? She got it in the old cave-dwelling days, in the shivering days, when the man kept warm hunting and the woman had to sit around and take care of the baby. Nature gave her that fat blanket then—and has not taken it away since. So says the professor, and surely it is an interesting announcement.

DOMESTIC troubles, foolish discussion of marriages began in the tree tops a million years ago—and still it goes on. Wilson Mizner—who married Mrs. Yerkes—writes in the old way, but most brilliantly, about marriage, taking the broad ground that marriage itself is sufficient ground for divorce, and adding bitterly, "When Reno fails, there is still Niagara Falls."

And Ralph Hertz, who, already a famous actor, was not satisfied with that end, married Lulu Glaser, has written on the question, "How to Be Happy Though a Husband." The way to be happy as a husband is to treat your wife well and make HER happy. Too bad more men don't know that. If you want the looking glass to smile at you, you smile at it. That is how it is with matrimony. Mr. Hertz does not say that, we say it. Hertz says the wise husband gives in, makes no scenes, and keeps his wife beside him all the time, so that she may know for herself where he has been and what he has done. The real trouble is that marriage is ideal but men are NOT, as yet. Some day men will be worthy of marriage, and then this world will be one large Arcadian grove.

ARE you anxious to be beautiful, Madame? Do you know that Lina Cavalieri writes every week about beauty—telling just how to be so beautiful that anybody would marry you if he could? And do you know that Lady Duff Gordon every week of her noble life writes about dresses and just what a lady of fifty should buy to make her look like fifteen?

ROSY days of hope are coming for those who hate mosquitoes. New ways have been found to kill them. Birds are to be imported especially to catch the big mosquitoes on the wing, rookeries for bats are to be established and protected that the mosquito may be hunted at night by the bat while the mosquito is hunting man. And small fish that can eat baby mosquitoes by the million are to wiggle in every pool.

Are you aware that mosquitoes have destroyed more human lives than all the deadly reptiles of India, all the redskins of North America, all the lions of Africa and all the mammoths of the Arctic regions put together? Rejoice with us that the mosquitoes' days are numbered.

DID we not say at the top of this column that it is the "vestibule of the wonder house?" We did, and it is, for this is a faint adumbration

No Mystery Is Too Baffling for Him

SAY! SOMEBODY STOLE MY UNDERSHIRT RIGHT OFF MY BACK!
BUT MY GOOD MAN— ARE YOU SURE YOU HAD IT ON?
YES, AND I HAD ALL THE REST OF MY CLOTHES ON, TOO, WHEN IT WAS STOLEN!
THIS IS A MYSTERY! AFTER MY OWN HEART! WHEN DID YOU DISCOVER YOUR LOSS.
IMPOSSIBLE!
I CALLED ON MR. SHRIMPO, AND WHEN I CAME OUT I FELT A CHILL—BR-R-R-R- IT MUST HAVE BEEN STOLEN WHILE I WAS INSIDE!
QUICK, WATSO,— ORDER A TAXI! WE'LL GO TO SHRIMPUS!
HERE'S THE HOUSE! SHALL I RING THE BELL?
SHRIMPO
NO WATSO, WE'LL LOOK AROUND ON THE OUTSIDE FIRST!
RUBBISH
LET ME EXPLAIN, GENTLEMEN.
WATSO, DO YOU THINK THERE'S ENOUGH WOOL HERE TO MAKE AN UNDERSHIRT?
RUBBISH
YOU TRIED TO PICK A THREAD OFF HIS COAT! OF COURSE YOU DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS PART OF HIS UNDERSHIRT, SO YOU KEPT ON PULLING TILL YOU UNRAVELED THE WHOLE GARMENT—
YOU'RE RIGHT! AND THEN I WAS TOO EMBARRASSED TO TELL HIM ABOUT IT.

The Pilot Praises the American's Stand

From the Boston Pilot.

Commenting on the movement among certain Protestant clergymen to revise the Ten Commandments, the AMERICAN this week justly remarks:

"The Bible states quite plainly that the Ten Commandments are given to us in the words of God himself.

"The reverend Protestant clergymen either do or do not believe that the Ten Commandments and other parts of the Bible are the exact words of God.

"If these Commandments are not God's words, anybody has a right to change them, and the most proper thing would seem to be to bring the matter up to Congress.

"If the clergymen who want to rewrite the Commandments do not believe that God spoke these Commandments to Moses, then, of course, they do not believe that any other part of the Bible represents divine commands, and, therefore, they speak with no authority at all, except that of their own changing views and greater or less personal virtue."

Our contemporary is much more logical than these clergymen, who fail to see, or do not wish to see the absurd position they take.

The Boldness of Our Girls in Courtship

In Japan, China and India the Preliminaries of Marriage Are Left to the Parents, Priests or Duennas, Who Make It Their Business

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1911, by the National News Association

THE young girls of Japan, China and India are not concerned with the preliminaries relating to marriage.

These matters are attended to by the parents and the priests and the old dueña was whose business it is to find husbands for girls and wives for youths.

The husband and wife rarely meet until the wedding takes place, unless they are cousins (which is a frequent occurrence), or unless they have been playmates as small children.

We, in America, regard this custom as deplorable, knowing that it must, as a rule, rob life of that romantic period of courtship—so beautiful to the Western-bred man and woman, and denying women any voice in the matter of the selection of her lifemate.

Yet it is a question which can only be settled by a careful census—a census of sentiment never yet attempted—whether the Oriental wives are not quite as happy after a decade or a score of years of married life as the American or European wives who selected their own mates.

That there are fewer separations and divorces in the East is a fact which does not bear weight in the argument. All the customs of the East render woman virtually helpless when it comes to the matter of attempting an independent career, and many a wife lives and dies, seemingly contented with her questionable lot, because there is no possible path of escape for her.

The Girl of the Orient Is Taught the Value of Modesty

The young girl of the Orient is taught very early that caste, culture and virtue all demand great modesty in her deportment toward the opposite sex. As a child, until the age of five or twelve, she is allowed to act as a child. After that she either veils her face wholly (if she is Egyptian, Turkish or Arabian) when outside her own portal, or, if she is Hindu, Tamil (or Indian of any high caste) she hides her face with her "saree" worn over the head for that purpose.

On no account can she speak to or look at a man who is not a blood relative without losing her dignity as a virtuous, modest girl.

This carries the idea of prudence and good behavior to an extreme. In America we carry to another extreme our idea of liberty in the conduct of young girls.

No doubt the fifteen and sixteen year old girl in the Orient grows anxious regarding her future if no husband has been selected for her by that time since it is the custom of her land to have the marital question settled early.

But she would only lose caste and injure her own prospects by making any display of her anxiety to secure a husband, in America the corresponding period when a young woman grows anxious to become "engaged" is from eighteen to twenty-five. But not at all infrequent is the visible and unmistakable effort of the sixteen-year-old girl in "High School" who makes the initiative move to attract a young man and to lead him to a proposal.

The average American girl combines the skill and boldness of the Oriental parent, priest and duenna in her search for a husband.

The Testimony of Three American Mothers

Three American mothers, living in three different localities of the United States, have related similar trials in their efforts to give attractive young sons an education and to see them well launched in a promising career.

Each mother was trying to be the friend, counsellor, chum and comrade of her son, and each found the young lad's time, thought and prospects interfered with and intruded upon by the young girls of his acquaintance. They rang the telephone and called him away from his studies. They wrote notes and sent him invitations to all sorts of festivities, and they even called at his home and urged him to act as their escort to various functions.

When he went away for a Summer outing with his parents they pursued him with letters, and by their unremitting attentions, succeeded in distracting his mind from study, and, in one case, leading the boy into marrying before he had become self-supporting.

In no other country on earth can daughters of respectable parents occupying positions of dignity in society be found who make these bold advances toward the opposite sex.

Young girls in England, France, Germany and all European countries are more carefully guarded by their parents and are not allowed the freedom which has been and is being misued by so many—by the large majority—of our American girls.

Liberty Is One Thing, But License Is Another

It is one thing to enjoy liberty of action. It is quite another to be guilty of license in conduct.

The girl who keeps the telephone busy calling up her young men friends and asking them to show her attentions is guilty of license and unmaidenly boldness. The man should always be the one to make advances.

There is no question that the Eastern women need greater liberty of action. There is no question that the American girl needs restricting in her liberty of conduct.

Handbooks for Commuters

Spots of Scenic and Historic Interest Around Boston.

This volume is intended to give the commuters some idea of the country through which they daily travel.

Arlington—Here the commuter may see from the car window a large embankment, where General Washington would have been seriously hurt if he had rolled down it.

Everett—Notice the magnificent view here. In the distance may be seen clearly a stupendous announcement of "the whiskey without a toothache."

Atlantic—Here stands the historic old bridge across the tracks. Over this bridge has been run many a thrilling race against time, famous commuters dashing across to catch the puffing train. The scenery at this point is superb.

The Country Home; General Hints Regarding.

During the Summer months it is not advisable to throw away heavy article, such as a teapot or flatiron, at your husband, as, if you should miss him, you may make a hole in one of the screens and thus admit flies to the house.

Flies carry on a large interstate commerce in germs, but they pay little heed to government regulation. To keep a fly from entering your house, induce it to enter a bottle, which should then be corked carefully and buried in some convenient spot.

To keep your house cool in Summer—you can't do it, so don't waste any time trying.

Mice: How to Keep Them Out of Your Cellar.

A very simple way to keep from being annoyed by mice in the cellar of your country house, and one that will greatly mortify the mice, is to build your house on spiles. Another good plan, although hardly so ingenious, is to fill the cellar entirely full of concrete. The later plan may also be used to keep mice out of your attic.

Health Wisdom

Measles are a cause of worry to many mothers, but with careful treatment there is absolutely no danger from them. Watch the child closely, and when the first measle appears move the boy rapidly around the room. This will confuse the other measles, which will not know where they should appear on the child, and will eventually depart through the window in baffled rage.

Scarlet fever is easily avoided by painting the child green.

To keep the child from catching whooping cough, tie his hands behind his back.
